THE THREE EMPERORS.—The following is a remarkable coincidence:—There are but three Emperors in Europe, and they are the only Sovereigns who came to the throne in the month of December: Nicholas of Russia, on the 1st; and Francis Joseph of Austria, and Napoleon of France, on the 2nd. Nicholas was 29 years of age when he acceded, and on the 1st of December (this day) 1854, he will have reigned 29 years. Francis Joseph will have reigned six years to-morrow. Napoleon, two years to-morrow. If we added that of Victoria, namely, 17 years, the four reigns will show the same number of years we have arrived at in the century, namely, 54.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

Poetry.

The Heroes of the Alma.

Ring the joy-bells—chime on, chime!
England conquers as of yore!
Ring for Alma's heights sublime,
Union Jack and Tricolor!
And let the people's voice!
O'er all the land rejoice,
That in the great, immortal fight,
The glorious living and the dead,
For freedom armed, for justice bled,
And conquered in the right!

Sound the requiem—deep and clear,
England weeps, her children slain.
Mourns with sympathy sincere,
Heroes lost but not in vain,
And let the solemn peal
A nation's grief reveal.
Yet—be the tears of sorrow dried,
We owe their babes a glorious debt;
And grief is vain if it forget
The claims of those who bled.

Ring the joy-bells! light the blaze!
And let the deep-voiced cannon roar;
Join all hands in pray'r and praise;
England conquers as of yore.
Our England and our France
In freedom's cause advance,
And fight for truth and human kind!
Their ancient glories are surpassed;
Long may their generous friendship last—
To brave a world combined!

Cheap and Efficient Mode of Saving Apples.

Mr. Editor,—I send you a description of a new and interesting method of saving winter apples, which a neighbor, Mr. Amos Chambers, has found out and practised for three seasons with success. It consists in making a large box of inch boards, sufficient to hold several waggon loads, which is lined up with the same material, and nailed to two-inch scantling, leaving that space between the outside and the inside; the bottom is made of lattices; and the whole rests on the ground upon four inch scantling. The winter apples are carefully gathered and put into this box, which is placed near the middle of the orchard, in the shade of an apple tree. The top of the box is covered over with boards in the same manner as the sides, with two thicknesses, leaving a space beneath them—the top of course made water-proof to exclude the rain. It is left in this manner until just the commencement of hard frost that would be liable to freeze the apples; the box is then banked up with earth, a few inches around the bottom, to exclude the air from going under it, the casing of two inches round the box is filled with dry loam or any kind of dry earth, and the top under the roof is also covered to the depth of an inch or two with earth, which effectually excludes the air from the apples; then they freeze up solid, and no rotting takes place, and will be found in excellent condition in the spring; and it is rather surprising that the flavor is not in the least injured. The air is left to circulate freely through the latticed bottom—the cover being left on loose, so as only to shed the rain. An opening with a lock-up shutter may be made near the top of the box, for the convenience of taking out apples at any time.

The above plan makes it an easy matter to house the apples without removing them from the orchard. Now, I would propose from the above data, that fruitgrowers erect a neat and ornamental building in their orchard, or in some convenient place, to be built on the same principle, to be lined up in a similar manner, and the casing filled with earth, or any substance that will exclude air, and act as a partial non-conductor of heat, with means for ventilating in the fall.

From some cause, there are very few cellars that will preserve apples or other fruit during a Canadian winter. Having tasted of the apple alluded to, I can bear evidence that they have preserved the finest flavor, and have been kept to the date I am now writing. There is a difficulty in other methods, in keeping the temperature at a certain point in this changeable climate, which would be otherwise necessary for apples.

Yours, respectfully,
T. G. Wilson.

Sheep in Winter.

In the first place, sheep should be provided with ample and warm accommodations for shelter. Therefore, if you have not one already, build a shed of sufficient dimensions to accommodate the number of sheep you have to winter. If the number of sheep be large, have a shed for every fifty or sixty head. Each shed must communicate with a tightly-enclosed yard. Access to each shed must be through an opening at one of the ends; ventilation other than the doorway must be provided. The floor of the shed should be covered in the first instance with three or four inches in depth of clean straw, when from the accumulation of sheep dung and discharge of urine the straw becomes dirty, the surface must be covered with fresh straw. Plaster should be strewed over the floor at least once a week.

For the convenience of feeding grain or roots, a trough ranging round the shed should be provided. The sheep should have salt always accessible to them. The best plan to secure this would be to have a trough in which rock-salt should be constantly kept. The sheep should have access to the yard at all times.

Three pounds of hay, or fodder, or its equivalent in meal or roots per day will sustain each head of sheep, which should be given them thrice a day, viz:—early in the morning, at noon, and at an hour before sunset. Occasional feeds of roots, say twice a week, are conducive to health—potatoes, or rutabaga, or common turnips, will answer. Water should be given to the sheep twice a day, to wit, in the morning and in the evening.

Sheep can be kept housed during the winter, altogether, to advantage, by a little extra care as above, letting them out in fine weather for airing and exercise.—American Farmer.

Hen Manure.

Like guano, hen manure posesses many valuable properties, in a form most conveniently concentrated. In all cases, however, where it is applied directly as a stimulent to crops, it should be compounded with some less powerful material, as loam, muck or garden soil. This is a necessary precaution, as the depositing of the seed on or beneath it, would inevitably prove fatal to its vitality. Mr. W. Bacon, an occasional correspondent in the Farmer, in the American Agriculturist, says:

I have lately been informed, by an intelligent and skilful cultivator, that the following preparation affords an ample and complete remedy. Take hen manure one part, reduce it as well as you can to powder; then with an equal part of Plaster of Paris, incorporate well together, and sprinkle the mixture over the vines, or sow it over the drills of your turnips.

"Hen Manure is free from seeds of foul weeds, and, in consequence of the great abundance of ammonia it contains, it possesses a great effect in pushing plants forward. Hence, for tomatoes, peppers, and similar plants in our northern climate, it possesses high value. It is well worth being saved with care, by farmers and gardners, for every purpose of cultivation. Care shouid be used, however, in its application, for if given in too large quantities, and placed in too close proximity to the roots of the plants, its effects are fatal. Its value for all purposes is greatly increased by being mixed with charcoal, or when this is not at hand, with plaster. Every man who keeps hens should have the hen-house so constructed as to save all the manure, and save it dry as may be, and he will find it no inconsiderable item in his matters of rural economy."

To Make Hens Lay Perpetually.—Keep no roosters; give the hens fresh meat, chopped up like sausage meat, once a day—a very small portion, say half an ounce a day to each hen in winter, or from the time insects disappear in the fall, till they appear again in the spring. Never allow any eggs to remain in the nest for what are called nest-eggs. When the roosters do not run with the hens, and no nest-eggs are left in the nest, the hens will not cease laying after the production of twelve or fifteen eggs, as they always do when roosters and nest-eggs are allowed, but continue laying perpetually. If the above plan were generally adopted, eggs would be as plentiful in winter as in summer. One reason why hens do not lay in winter as freely as in summer, is the want of animal food, which they get in summer in abundance in the form of insects.—English Paper.

Ventilation of Stables.—We have sometimes speculated as to which stable is most inimical to the health and comfort of horses,—the one with an inch between each plank in the floor, a hole in the door, a clapboard off one side, and a broken window in the other, with a leaky roof, or a small, tightly-built one, without any means of ventilation. Unfortunately, there are too many of each class in all sections of the country. But the number is, we trust, yearly getting less. See to it, however, you who have had energy enough to build a neat, good, substantial barn, that from lack of juicious ventilation, your horses are not as much injured in eyes and lungs from the lack of good air and the constant exhalation of noxious vapors, as they would be in other respects in the tumble-down barn of your neighbor Shiftless.—Rural New Yorker.

The following "hit" Punch suggests for the consideration of whom it may concern, alluding to the Russian proclivities of the Greeks and their Government:—"What if there should appear in the next European Family Recipe book [revised in London and Paris] a direction how to take Greece out of Maps."

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

Article I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Maesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

Art. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of siguatures to the Pledge.

Art. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

Art. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

Art. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specfic object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

Art. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

Art. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

Art. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

Art. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

Art. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

FORGERY.
The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

The public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never seli R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

All of our travellers and authorized Agents have a power of Attorney signed by us, authorizing them in our name, to transact our business.

The following are our only Agents in Hamilton, C. W. T. BICKLE & SON; HAMILTON, KNEESHAW & CO., In Toronto, LYMAN BROTHERS, & CO., are our general agents—we also sell to SIMPSON & CO.

Poetry.

From the London Punch.

The Due of the Dead.

I sit beside my peaceful hearth,
With curtains drawn and lamp trimmed bright;
I watch my children's noisy mirth;
I drink in home, and its delight.

I sip my tea and criticise
The war from flying rumors caught;
Trace on the map, to curious eyes
How here they marched, and there they fought.

In intervals of household chat,
I lay down strategetic laws;
Why this manœuvre, and why that;
Shape the event, or show the cause.

Or, in smooth dinner-table phrase,
Twixt soup and fish, discuss the fight;
Give to each chief his blame or praise;
Say who was wrong and who was right.

Meanwhile o'er Alma's bloody plain
The scathe of battle has rolled by—
The wounded writhe and groan—the slain
Lie naked staring to the sky.

The out-worn surgeon plies his knife,
Nor pauses with the closing day;
While those who have escaped with life
Find food and fuel as they may.

And when their eyes in sleep they close,
After scant rations duly shared,
Plague picks his victims out, from those Whom chance of battle may have spared.

Still when the bugle sounds the march,
He tracks his prey through steppe and dell;
Hangs fruit to tempt the throats that parch,
And poisons every stream and well.

All this with gallant heart is done:
All this with patient hearts is borne;
And they by whom the laurel's won
Are seldom they by whom 'tis worn.

No deed, no suffering of the war,
But wins us fame, or spares us ill;
Those noble swords, though drawn afar,
Are guarding English homesteads still.

Owe we a debt to these brave men,
Unpaid by aught that's said or sung:
By leaders from a ready pen,
Or phrases from a flippant tongue.

The living, England's hand may crown
With recognition, frank and free;
With titles, medals, and renown;
The wounded shall our pensioners be.

But they, who meet a soldier's doom—
Think you, it is enough good friend,
To plant the laurel at their tomb,
And carve their names—and there an end?

No. They are gone: but there are left
Those they love best while they were here—
Parents made childless, babes bereft,
Desolate widows, sisters dear.

All these let grateful England take;
And, with a large and liberal heart,
Cherish, for her slain soldiers' sake,
And of her fulness give them part.

Fold them within her sheltering breast;
Their parent, husband, brother, prove,
That so the dead may be at rest,
Knowing those cared for whom they love.

Literature.

From Chambers's Journal.

Russia and the Czar.

Russian society—that is to say, aristocratic society—on the surface resembles the society of other European countries, but on the whole it differs from it. It has two centres—St. Petersburg and Moscow. In St. Petersburg it is the court, or rather Nicholas himself, who fashions society according to his desires. It bears entirely the official stamp; preponderence is given to officers, and to the high officials of the state. Dance, feasts, music, and the ballet, occupy the attention; politics and science are excluded from fashionable life. Times have changed since the epoch of Catherine, who liked to be praised by Voltaire and the French Encyclopædists as a protectress of literature; they differ also from the epoch of Alexander, who delighted in the mystical dreams and sentimental philanthropy of Madame Krudener. Both sovereigns allowed to science some liberty; and Dershaven the poet, and Karamsin the historian, could, with the full approbation of the court, publish such compositions as now might be visited by banishment to the Caucasus. It is true, towards the end of their reign, both Catherine and Alexander became more cautious, and drew the fetters of censorship tighter; yet their reign, as compared with that of Nicholas, was a reign of liberty. In the eyes of the present Czar, science and literature are too dangerous tools for despotism—a two-edged sword which he does not wish to weild; though he often becomes furious that the attacks on Russia cannot be met by the official Russian authors in a readable shape. Jealous of his power, he hates and fears any of his subjects whose name becomes known without the previous permission of his government. The fame of his generals throws an additional splendor on the Czar, who has selected them for the command of his armies. He can unmake them, by putting them in some obscure corner of his empire. But an author may become popular without the Emperor's leave; and though he sends him to Siberia, as he did with Bestusheff, or to the Caucasus, as happened to Lermontoff, their thoughts cannot be banished, their exile does but enhance the excitement of the public, and the desire to read their productions. The Czar, with all his unlimited power, cannot create talents, nor can he destroy their results. Still, Nicholas attempts to put down the spirit of independent Russian authors, by withholding from literature the imperial approbation; it is not fashionable in St. Petersburg to become an author. Nicholas is surrounded by mediocrity; by generals whose highest ambition is to be severe disciplinarians; by pliant German functionaries from the Baltic provinces; by servile conservative Russians, enemies of all progress; himself cold, obstinate, distrustful, without compassion, without elevation of soul, as mediocre as the persons around him.

In the time of Alexander, during the war with France, when so many Germans and French entered the Russian service, from hatred of Napoleon, and in the hope of finding in Russia the lever for raising European liberty and independence from under French oppression, the army was surrounded by a halo of universal respect, as the refuge of European liberty. The officers were the soul of Russian aristocratic society; they represented not only the gallantry, but likewise all that was liberal in the empire. But from the time of the accession of Nicholas to the throne, and of the military conspiracy of 1826, the army has been purged of all the elements of independence. The Czar gives a marked preference to the officers over the civilians; but he has introduced a coarse tone into the army—drilling seems to be its only aim. Under Alexander, the troops were machines; but the officers felt themselves patriots, and were proud to be the most enlightened and progressive part of society. Now, they have become lifeless machines, [servile ministers of the Czar, without any sentiment of their own dignity. During a reign of twenty-seven years, the jealousy of Nicholas has, in St. Petersburg, killed every feeling of independence: his government officials are his clerks, his officers of the army his drill-sergeants.

Moscow presents in every respect a different picture. Functionarism could not get ascendency in the society of the old heart of the empire. The dress-coat prevails here over the regimentals; still the civilian government officer is only exceptionally admitted to society. Moscow is the seat of the old aristocracy of the empire, and society here consists principally of independent rich landowners, who do not covet government offices, but occupy themselves with the administration of their estates, and with science and literature, without requiring anything from the Czar, save to be left alone. It is entirely the reverse of the nobility of St. Petersburg, which is attached to the court and to public service, devoured by servile ambition, excepting all from government only, and living upon it. Not to demand anything, to remain independent, and avoid public office, is in despotic countries a sign of opposition; and the Czar is angry with those idlers who spend their winter in Moscow, and remain for the remainder of the year on their estates, reading all that is published in Western Europe. To possess a library, belongs now to the necessities of the Russian country gentleman; and to have a secret cabinet filled with prohibited books, is the pitch of fashion.

Thus St. Petersburg and Moscow are the two opposite poles of Russian society, representing the Court and the opposition; yet in such a despotic country as Russia, the personal tastes and inclinations of the monarch have so great an influence, that even the life of Moscow is in a great degree controlled by his supreme will. The rich Moscovite prince may dare to despise government offices, after he has in his youth served for a few years in the army or in the bureaux, one or other of which is necessary to maintain his nobility; he may live far from the Court, retired upon his estates, enjoying the forbidden books he gets by the smuggler; yet he cannot but be sometimes reminded that he lives under the sway of the despotic Czar, who does not forget those silent opponents of his authority. Not that he would banish them; such punishment is reserved for those who talk of politics, not for those who look apathetically on the doings of government; but he sends them word, that he expects them to do something for the progress of the country; to build a cotton-mill, and to employ their serfs in manufactories; or to raise wine on hills of the Crimea, and on the banks of the Don, or to have mines in the Ural worked. The Czar does not expect that they should make money by such speculations; on the contrary, he is well aware that the mill and the vineyard will remain heavy incumbrances on the income of the persons to whose patriotism he has appealed, and that the gold dug out in the Ural may perhaps cost twenty-five shillings the sovereign. But the glory of the country is to be raised in such ways; and the Manchester manufacturer, who finds one wing of the baronial castle turned into a workshop, is delighted to see the mighty aristocracy of Russia paying tribute to industry. And, in fact, it is a tribute which the aristocracy residing around Moscow willingly pays to the whim of the Czar, in order to be allowed to remain undisturbed. However, the immense power of the Czar, which changes the aspect of society in every new reign, has largely affected the mind of the Russian. Peter I. gave the first coat of varnish to the original barbarism of Russian aristocracy; he drilled them into soldiers, shipwrights, sailors, courtiers, and chamberlains. They had to accept German and French manners, but he did not educate them. Gluttony and luxury of every kind remained the adherent vices of the people. Under his successors—nearly all of them females, for the most of the males soon died the natural death of Czars—the scandalous conduct of the court soon demoralised society, though German and French forms were in turn adopted, and rigorously enforced. Russia was again, under Catherine II., ruled by an imperial mind; like Peter, she aimed continually at the aggrandisement of the empire. She was in correspondence with Voltaire, and protected science and literature; she gave the second and more brilliant varnish to Russian society, which, by her licentious example, was encouraged in debauchery. The madness of her son Paul, more fit for a drill-sergeant than for an emperor, again aroused the original rudeness of the Russians. But soon after his death, his successor, Alexander, did all he could to assimilate his aristocracy to the western civilized nations. In opposition to Napoleonic France, Russia became liberal; and the French and German emigrants instructed the Russians in good manners and the elegances of life. Still, all their efforts acted upon the surface. Napoleon only knew it, and remarked, therefore, justly: 'Gratez le Russe, et vous verrez le Tartare.' Western civilization is in Russia only the varnish of the original savage. Yet Alexander's mystical and half-liberal turn of mind had, in his long reign, a soothing influence on the character of the Russian aristocracy, which, during the wars with Napoleon, had seen more of Europe in fifteen years than before in a century. Foreign literature proved to be fertilizing; it roused the native energies, and a national literature began to develop itself. At this time Russians began to read Russian books, and no longer only French and German; they began to wean themselves from foreign influences; they dared to think for themselves; they grew warm in their sympathy for struggling Greece. A crisis was impending, when Alexander died. The spirit of the higher classes of the army were in a state of fermentation; but the outbreak of December 26, 1825, which was to destroy the omnipotence of the Czar, was quenched by the energy and personal courage of Czar Nicholas. The conspirators and rioters were shot down with grape, and the tottering imperial throne was founded more firmly in the midst of a pool of blood; the flower of Russian aristocracy, the most generous hearts in the army, were executed, or sent to the mines of Siberia. The aspect of society suddenly changed; the French doctrinaire liberalism, and the visionary German mysticism of the time of Alexander, had to disappear: Nicholas is a matter-of-fact man and despises speculation. Generous aspirations became dangerous; materialism, pedantry, discipline, were the watchwords for the new reign. Czar Nicholas transforms the organisation of government into barracks and offices. He fears the influences of Western ideas, and throws difficulties into the easy intercommunication with foreign countries: to get a passport is now become a favour, whilst, formerly, travelling in Europe was encouraged: nor are foreigners any longer admitted into the empire, unless they are merchants, or above all suspicion. But, on the other side, he endeavours to arouse a national exclusive spirit, which may in future isolate Russia, and keep it back from the ways of Western Europe: the ladies at court must wear the Russian costume; moreover, the Russian language, which since Peter I. had been excluded from Society, becomes again fashionable by command of the Czar. Peter I. worked for years to make the Russians Europeans, and his successors followed his example for a whole century; Nicholas now works to separate them from the West, and once more to arouse their nationality. He has succeeded, perhaps, beyond his expectation; the original Russian nature has been roused; and the present crisis is but the necessary consequence of the revival of narrow-minded bigotry and savage combativeness. Russia has been put in opposition to Europe; Russia is 'holy,' and Europe is wicked. A few epigrams of Lermontoff describe this reaction and its consequences very strikingly:

No traitor to my native land,
Nor of my sires unworthy am I;
In that, unlike to you, to limp
On home-made crutches likes me not.

For that I blush their deeds to see,
Nor music hear in clanking chains,
Nor glittering arms think beautiful;
No patriot am I, they say!

Since not of the ancient mould I am,
Since backward I decline to go,
I (in their view) ill understand
My country, and disparge it.

Haply they're right; the devil appreciates it;
For here, who go but backwards, most advance,
And earlier far they at the goal arrive
Than I, who onward ever took my way.
With eyes God blessed me, and with feet; but when
I, venturesome, commenced with feet to walk,
With eyes to see, the prison was my doom.
God gave to me a tongue; but I began
To speak, and had to rue. How strange a land!
The wise man, here, only to be a fool
Uses his mind, and wants his tongue for silence.

Lermontoff had sufficient reason for his epigrams. When the untimely death of the great poet Pushkin by the pistol of Dantes d'Heeckeren, suddenly aroused the poetical genius of the young man—who up to that time had lived a life of pleasure at St. Petersburg, and his innignation dictated to him some beautiful stanzas addressed to the Czar, claiming justice and revenge—he in three days had become a celebrated and reputed man. His stanzas were spread, in manuscript, all over the capital; they had, indeed reached the Czar; but in the same hour, the imperial order reached the young poet, which banished him to the Caucasus, on account of his boldness and sudden popularity. The Czar does not allow any one to censure his conduct, even in the form of loyalty, or of hope for the future. His person is sacred; and, like the idols of old, not to be approached but behind a cloud of incense. Nicholas is, in this respect, just as exacting as his father was, who, when the French ambassador mentioned a Russian scholar, calling him eminent in science, Czar Paul seemed offended, and replied, that in Russia no man is eminent unless the Emperor allows it.

The jealousy of Nicholas is not less striking; not even his favourites can dare to express the slightest doubt of his infallibility. Prince Woronzoff, whom the Czar honoured with personal friendship, had to experience the disgrace of his master, in consequence of a curious incident at the camp at Woznosensk. An army of 60,000 men was assembled there, and the sham-fights had, indeed, the dimensions of actual war. The Czar, who believes himself to be a first-rate strategist and a great general, made all the plans for the general action, which was to close the performances. He took command of half the army, and gave the other half to Prince Woronzoff, so as to represent the enemy. The battle had begun in the morning; and after a series of most skilful manœuvres, the Czar was to out-general the enemy on all the points, and in the evening to capture Woznosensk, supposed to be the centre and stronghold of the enemy. All the exercises were executed in the most masterly way, according to the plan of the Czar; but on the paper he had forgotten one brigade of the adverse army, which at the end of the action was neither defeated nor cut off; and Prince Woronzoff, therefore, as a good strategist, retired with it to Woznosensk, which according to the Czar's opinion, was not defended. When, therefore, in the evening, Nicholas, at the head of his staff, galloped triumphantly into the city, to receive the submission of the enemy, he saw himself suddenly surrounded by a force which he did not expect, and Prince Woronzoff approached him with these words: "Your majesty is my prisoner." Nicholas smiled, and handed his sword to the prince, who, not accepting it, delivered his own sword to his master. But instead of making a compliment to the prince for his clever generalship, the Czar, on the same evening, sent orders to Prince Woronzoff to take care of his health, and to visit the spas of Germany. He was banished in this form, for having been a better general than his imperial master and friend, and for several years he remained in disgrace. It was only when Shamyl's mountaineers had repeatedly defeated the Russian army, that the Czar remembered Woronzoff, and intrusted the civil and military command of Transcaucasia to the accomplished prince. I have this anecdote from one of the Austrian officers, who was present at the camp at Woznosensk; and I do not doubt its authenticity, as it is entirely in the character of the Czar.

Two foreigners only, both of them having had an opportunity of seeing Nicholas at his court—Custine, the Frenchman, and Henningsen, the Englishman—give us a description of his character and of his measures.

Custine says: "It is easy to see that the Emperor cannot forget who he is, nor the constant attention of which he is the object: il pose incessamment (he attitudinises unceasingly), from whence results that he is never natural, even when he is sincere. His features have three distinct expressions, not one of which is that of simple benevolence. The most habitual seems to me to be that of constant severity. Another expression, though rare, better befits that fine countenance—it is that of solemnity. The third is politeness; and into this glide a few shades of graciousness, which temper the cold astonishment caused by the other two. But notwithstanding this graciousness, there is one thing that destroys the moral influence of the man; it is, that each of these physiognomies, which arbitrarily replace each other on his face, is taken up or cast aside completely, without leaving any trace of the preceding to modify the expression of the new. It is a change of scene with upraised curtain, which no transition prepares us for. It appears a mask taken off and put on at pleasure. Do not misunderstand the sense I here attach to the word mask; I use it according to its etymology. In Greek, hypocrite means actor—the hypocrite was the man who masked himself to perform a part. I mean, that the Emperor is always mindful of his part, and plays it like a great actor."

Henningsen says of his character: "The Emperor Nicholas has not the brutal instincts of the Czar Peter I., any more than his talents; he has not the disordered passions of Catherine, his grandmother, any more than her brilliant intellect and her innate liberality; he has not the fitful ferocity of Paul, his murdered sire, any more than his enthusiastic generosity; neither has he the irresolute, impressible nature of Alexander, his brother and predecessor, nor Alexander's benevolence of intention.

"The Emperor Nicholas, who nervously shudders at the physical danger in which he sees a private soldier placed, is probably not innately cruel; but absolute and irresponsible power, the self-deification to which his auto-veneration has led, acting on a limited intellect and selfish heart, have made him think himself the irate Jupiter Tonans, whose wrath should be as terrible as his interests and glory should be sacred from competition with those of humanity. When they are so, he passes over them ruthlessly and remorselessly, without even apparently the consciousness of evil-doing.

"The influence of wealth, of family, of customs, and of privileges, affords no longer any shelter. Prudent as he is in disposition, being aware that he possesses a power unparalleled, he uses it in a manner unprecedented. Not only does he hourly trample on both his great vanquished enemies—the nobility of his empire and the Polish nation; not only has he uprooted whole races, and succeeded in extirpating the religious creed of millions; but he seems now bent both on destroying the nationality and religious faith of the whole of Poland, even, if required by transplanting its population to Asia. Political violence and cruelties, the mere extirpation of races or of creeds, would be nothing, however, to the condition to which his subjects are reduced—comparatively nothing—because races are doomed, according to the law of nature, to perish, and creeds flourish and wither, and being immaterial, spring again from their ashes. But the dull, monotonous, hopeless, all-pervading oppression to which his subjects are reduced, producing the same moral effect on the human mind as the slough of his northern bogs on the human frame sinking into it, blinding the eye, silencing the tongue, and paralysing the agglutinated limbs, is infinitely more terrible—doubly terrible—because it is a destiny the sufferers must not only endure, but propagate by foreign conquest, and by the natural reproduction and increase of population."

Miscellaneous.

Female Prudishness.

The other day we offered our hand to a lady who was about to pitch out of an omnibus into the mud. She took no notice of it, but choose to swing herself down by the railing, regarding us meanwhile with a look of rebuke as if we had insulted her. Now we do not pique ourselves upon etiquette, but we flatter ourselves that the hand aforesaid was tendered with the modesty and propriety becoming a gentleman; but no matter for that, if it had been the brawny fist of some honest-hearted Patrick who had dropped his hod to help the lady, her rejection of such well-meant kindness would have been an act of insolent hautier. Had we offered to assist a well bred French lady, her sweet toned "Mercie Monsieur, mercie," would still have lingered on our ear. A true English lady would have accepted the courtesy with a smiling "I thank you."

A lady who is not afraid to receive the common civilities of life from a stranger, shows far higher sense of character than one who draws herself up stiffly within silks and kid, and pouts at every man as if he were a rone. What we have referred to is a national trait. Our case is not isolated.

The above is part of an article we found in the New York Independent.

"The "national trait" there spoken of is true, and pity 'tis, 'tis true. Every man—that is every gentleman—has had a like experience. No woman on the face of the earth—we speak of them collectively—receive a proffered kindness, from a stanger with such an ungracious manner, as American women. No matter what the civility is, or what expense of personal comfort rendered, it is all the same; the favor is accepted, rather it is taken, as a matter of right, and with an 'of course' frigidness of manner, and repulsive stiffness, as if there was not a joint in their body which would bend a gracious nod, or a grateful courtesy.

In a car, in church, in the concert room, in the street, at the public table, every day the occasion occurs in which it is a duty—and if appreciated, would be a pleasure—to render civilities to ladies, who, although strangers, have a claim upon common politeness for such services. How amply repaid one feels, on the bestowal of a casual attention, to receive a hearty 'thank you' from a pair of generous lips. The reward is so rare you are almost inclined to follow up the gracious donor in hopes 'something else may turn up,' again to call your services into requisition. Of course there are exceptions among American woman—there are many exceptions—and to these were turn thanks in behalf of *man*kind for their thousand smiles, and winning ways so handsomely tendered, when a lost veil has been picked up, a fip passed to the omnibus driver, a sash shoved down to keep out the sun, or a glass shoved up to keep out the rain, or a seat yielded in the centre of the car to accomodate the last one of a party, or the bill of fare, or the cake dish passed at table.

As to the unpardonable impertinence of a passing remark, that is not to be thought of, such a thing can't be tolerated without an introduction, even in a private circle by an invitation from a mutual friend. No, a formal, set introduction must be suffered. Drawn up in front in position number three, dancing master style, "Miss Prude will you allow me the pleasure to make you acquainted with Mr. Timid, my particular friend; Mr. Timid, Miss Prude," and one bows like a well sweep, and the other sinks like a sand-crane, and permission is granted to offer a cream or a nut, and—if you know all about each other—even a motto with a sugar plum.

American woman—then whom no earthly beings receive more homage or attention—owe it to themselves to thus mend their manners, as to always acknowledge a politeness from a stranger, more marked, it should be, than if from an acquaintance; they should look upon an invitation from a mutual friend, as sufficient introduction—at least for the time being—to entitle a gentleman to a reasonable amount of small talk, and to render those numberless little civilities which smoothe an hour, and make mellow and happy a transient evening.—Clev. Herald.

Good Advice.

John H. Prentice, in his recent valedictory on retiring from the editorial chair, which he had filled for forty years has the following:

"No man should be without a well conducted newspaper. He is far behind the spirit of the age, unless he reads one, is not upon equal footing with his fellow man who enjoys such advantages, and is disregardful of his duty to his family, in not affording them an opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of what is passing in the world, at the cheapest possible teaching. Show me a family without a newspaper, and I venture to say that there will be manifest in that family, a want of amenity of manners, and indications of ignorance most strikingly in contrast with the neighbor who allows himself such a rational indulgence. Young men especially, should read newspapers. If I were a boy, even of twelve years, I would read a newspaper weekly, though I had to work by torch-light to earn money enough to pay for it. The boy who reads will learn to think and analyze; and, if so, he will be almost sure to make a man of himself, hating vicious indulgence, which reading is calculated to beget a distaste for.

London Charities.

Magnificent, indeed, are the charities of London! By their help many thousands persons can get born for nothing, nursed for nothing, clothed for nothing, educated for nothing, put to a trade for nothing, attended when they are sick, helped when they are poor, and buried when they are dead—all for nothing. If charities could avail for the poor, then no city in the world were better off than London. If subscribing money were all that is necessary for the elevation of the people, then money enough is surely subscribed in London, where about two millions sterling are yearly raised for charitable purposes alone. Take the free hospitals of London for example, and you find twelve magnificent public institutions maintained for general purposes, and forty-six for specific purposes. Among the latter, are hospitals for Germans, for Spaniards, for seamen, for prostitutes, for nurses, for lunatics, for idiots, for invalids, for cripples, for incurables and women and for children. Besides these, are hospitals for the cure of particular diseases—hospitals for consumption, for fever, small pox, diseases of the skin, diseases of the eye, diseases of the ear,—for scrofula, for cancer, for hernia, for hip and spinal diseases, for fistuln, and for glandular diseases. Besides, there are the public dispensaries, which administer medicines, medical and surgical advice, soup, bread, blankets, coals, homœopathic pills, and help of all kinds—for nothing. The charities of London volunteer to do everything for men and women except marrying them, and that too, is done by the officials of a public institution supported on public money, the ceremony being performed for a very low charge. Once married the road through London, life is lined with charities. Is there a prospect of an increase of family? Then the expectant mother, if poor and respectable, has only to apply to the visitor of the district Visiting Society, who will obtain for her a ticket of admission to the British Lying-in Hospital, the City of London Lying-in Hospital, or the Royal Maternity Charity; or she can be attended at her own house by a surgeon from the Queen Adelaide and British Ladies' Institution. By means of these societies she gets herself churched, and her child registered and baptized—for nothing. If she still wants assistance, the District Visiting Society will provide her with coals, linen, blankets and bread, or recommend her to numerous societies which furnish all these. If she requires the help of a nurse, she has no difficulty in obtaining the loan of one from the work-house, through the agency of the Maternal Society. When the child is of sufficient age, the mother gets it vaccinated for nothing at the Royal Vaccine establishment, or the Royal Jennarian and London Vaccine Institution, or by the vaccinating surgeon of the district—by any of them for nothing. If the child takes ill, there is the Royal Infirmary for children and the Hospital for sick children. If the parents of the child should die, there are many orphan schools provided—if a boy, to educate him in a trade or profession; if a girl, to bring her up well, and in some cases, to present her with a marriage portion of £100, as in the case of Raine's Charity. A great number of the charity schools feed, clothe, lodge and educate the children, and then put them to a trade—all for nothing. Thus, through life the poor man in London is accompanied by charities of all sorts, which volunteer to bring him into the world, to suckle him, to nurse him, to vaccinate him, to educate him, to teach him a trade, to supply him with blankets, coals, soup, physic, Scripture reading and 'friends in need"—all for nothing!

The Thames was visited one day last week by a shoal of whales, numbering between forty and fifty, some of them apparently thirty or forty feet in length, who disported themselves in the middle of the river, between Gravesend and Tilbury Fort. They proceeded up as far as off Rosherville, then reversed their course, having come in contact with two steamers coming down the river. They were of that class of whales called by the fisherman "finners"—a name, judging from the immense dorsal fin, which, when they arose to the surface, appeared to be from eight to ten feet in length, most appropriate to them. The appearance of these fish in the river so high up as Gravesend created the greatest surprise, as a similar visit, as the watermen and fishermen averred, had never before been observed. The whales were pursued by some fishermen in boats, but succeeded in escaping unhurt.

A FIREMAN'S TOAST—The ladies—their eyes kindle the only flames which we cannot extinguish, and against which there is no insurance.

From the Montreal Gazette.

Can such things be?—A Proposition for Kidnapping.

We were yesterday, (the day of its reception,) furnished with a copy of the subjoined letter. We lay it before our readers for their enlightenment with regard to the encroachments of the slave power. Not content with turning the free states of their own union into a hunting ground for fugitive slaves—not content with imposing a law upon the country which makes every freeman in the United States legally bound to be aiding and assisting the slaveholders in recovering their man-chattels, they venture to pursue their game still farther and to attempt to tarnish free and unstained British ground with their damning traffic in men. Our readers were informed last summer of an attempt made in U. Canada similar to that proposed by this ruffian Pope, which was signally discomfitted after it had proceeded as far as to amount to an overt act of kidnapping, as well as of the project to entice away a fugitive slave in the employ of R. H. Stephens, Esq., of this city, which was also promptly met, and defeated. We have now a cool project from a Maryland constable and slave-hunter, to the head of our police force, asking him to break the laws of God and his country, and because a partner in a wholesale scheme to kidnap the poor colored men who have taken refuge among us. We know not whether Mr. Hays intends answering his most insulting epistle at all; but if he does, we know full well what his answer will be. We know how fiercely he will spurn so outrageous a proposal, as would all others in Canada, save the basest and most abject of God's creatures who dwell among us. And we have one word of advice to give Mr. Pope, which is this, that he will do well not to venture one inch beyond the frontier in pursuance of his object. We happen to know that the inhabitants of the frontier, though generally a law-abiding people, have a holy horror of slavery and all its promoters, and clever Mr. Pope might come in for some peculiarly disagreeable manifestations of their righteous indignation. He might, indeed, go back a colored man himself. We have no desire to counsel violence towards any man, but such a proposition as that we have just read in this negro-hunter's letter, rouses a spirit of indignation which prevents all calm reflection. If ever the taking of the law into one's own hands were justifiable, it would be in such a case as this. We will not trust ourselves to write more about it to-day, but can only cry shame on the man who would so degrade himself as to make such a proposition! Triple shame on the people whose laws sanction his conduct! And we may thank God once more, and rejoice, that their country is not ours,—that we have no share or participation in their sin:—

{ FREDERICK, MARYLAND,
United States of America,
January 1st, 1855.

To the Chief of Police, Montreal, Canada:

DEAR SIR,—Though the Laws of your Province preclude Slavery, and you may deem it improper that I should address you relative to that question, which has created so great sectional animosity at home, and elicited such disapproval abroad,—still, believing that a sense of justice influences every right thinking man in the formation of his judgment, and the mode of his conduct, I have taken the liberty, which, if it meets not with views alike to mine, will be pardoned.

Vast numbers of slaves, escaping from their masters or owners, succeed in reaching your Provinces, and are, therefore, without the pale of the "Fugitive Slave Law," and can only be restored by cunning, together with skill.

Large rewards are offered and will be paid for their return, and could I find an efficient person to act with me, a great deal of money could be made, as I would equally divide. Many are willing to come after writing to that effect. The only apprehension we have in approaching too far into Canada, is the fear of being arrested; and had I good assistant in your city, who would induce the negroes to the frontier, I would be there to pay the cash. On your answer, I can furnish names and descriptions of negroes, which will fully reward the trouble.

Answer either to accept or decline.

Yours,

JOHN H. POPE,

Police Officer and Constable.

William Wells Brown at Philadelphia.

William Wells Brown has just concluded a series of lectures in Philadelphia. This, we believe, is the first attempt of a colored man to give a course of lectures, embracing other topics than the anti-slavery subject, and we are glad to learn that these lectures have been very successful. The first evening, Mr. Brown gave his audience an introduction to some of the great men and women of the Old World, and portrayed the beauties of several of the noted places in London and Paris. The lecture on the second evening was on "Saint Domingo, its Revolutions and its Patriots," and attracted more attention, owing to the present attitude of this country to Hayti, than it otherwise would. This lecture has already been published, and met with a rapid sale in Philadelphia, where it was delivered. "The Humble Origin of Great Men" was the third of the course, and was well attended. This subject was well chosen, as it was calculated to inspire the colored people with energy, and cause them to surmount difficulties to educate themselves. After delivering two lectures on Slavery, Mr. Brown was invited to lecture before the "Banaker Institute," one of the literary Associations among the colored people of Philadelphia. This Lecture was on "Mahomet and Confucius," and the founder of the religion of Mecca and the distinguished Chinese scholar were both ably handled by the lecturer. It is a fact, that cannot be denied, that the free colored people pay too little attention to literature, and thereby fail in obtaining that knowledge of the world and its affairs that is desirable. We hope, therefore, that these lectures will be followed up by others. The very fact of one like William Wells Brown being able, after so many years spent in slavery, to lecture to his brethren on the above subjects, ought to give them renewed courage, and cause every colored person in the land to labour early and late for his own elevation.

SOUTHERN REVIVALS.—The editor of the Western Christian Advocate says—"We have the following on authority that admits of no questioning: Recently, in a town of a certain slave State, a revival took place in the church under the charge of Rev. Mr.——. During the meeting, a slave-trader professed conversion, and joined the church, and a local preacher became much encouraged thereat. Soon after the close of the meeting, the slave trader made a purchase from the local preacher of a slave woman who had a child at her breast. The trader not wishing the child, and the mother refusing to go without it, strong cords were obtained; a dray was sent for; she was tied hands and feet, and was carried by main force, and strapped down to the dray, and was thus driven off."

TWO WOMEN INDICTED FOR THE MURDER OF A SLAVE IN NEW-ORLEANS.—The Grand Jury reported to the First District Court, on Saturday, true bills for murder against Mrs. Aimes Dietz and Mrs. Eliza Dimintry, in having caused the death of the slave girl Leda, about a month ago, by whipping and ill-treating her while she was suffering, as the physician's certificate stated, from worms. When the women were arrested, at the time of the occurrence, Judge Robertson admitted them to bail. Upon the Grand Jury's indictment they were on Saturday, again arrested, and locked up in the parish prison to await their trial. Their counsel, Mr. Larue, then made application to the Court to again admit them to bail, citing two or three precedents, both in this country and in England, in support of his application, but the principal grounds of the application were that Mrs. Dimitry was very sick, and being locked up in a damp cell, and other reasons, might cause her death, and that the mother, Mrs. Dietz, was too old and infirm to stand close confinement and the anxieties attending thereon. The Court decided to admit the parties to bail in the sum of $10,000 each, on account of their ill health and infirmities; and on account of some doubts as to the guilt of the parties of the charges on which they had been indicted. The Attorney General suggested that the Court would do well to give its reasons for that opinion in writing, in order that it might stand as a precedent in murder cases hereafter. Judge Robertson said he should comply with the very proper request of the Attorney General at some future time.—Daily Crescent, Dec. 25.

Temperance.

Progress of Temperance in Australia

We take the following from the Glasgow Commonwealth. It is an extract of a letter from Australia, published in that paper. It shows that there is considerable activity among the friends of temperance in that colony:—

The Anti-Liquor-Law-League has been working energetically. Numerous meetings have been held in Melbourne, Geelong, and other parts of the colony, and a considerable amount of opposition has been avoked. Of course there is a large majority at present who say that the Maine Law will never be tolerated here. Whether it should or not is another question, and one upon which there is a diversity of opinion. But the discussion of this question has done much good, a fact which might be proved by the opposition excited by an interested class, viz: 'The Licensed Victuallers,' who have organised a society for the defence of the 'trade,' and who very appropriately are presided over by a member of the City Council, who, on a recent memorable occasion, was so intoxicated as to require the assistance of the police to convey him to the police office, where he was found by the mayor.

Drunkenness, we are inclined to believe, is not so prevalent as it was a short time ago. The publicans are complaining loudly, and some of them have become bankrupt—not a bad sign, if we could suppose it arose from less drinking. That may be one cause, but the chief one we believe to be, the great increase in the number of license houses. We have many here larger than your 'George', or 'Royal' Hotels, but all ours have a public bar entering from the street. The licensing bench sometime ago made a sort of promise, that all suitable houses with the necessary accommodation would receive license, irrespective of the apparent need of an increase in their number in any locality. At their court last week they adopted a few lines of tactics, and refused every application for new licenses. Socially, our condition continues to progress."

History of a Distilery.

What if the history of a distillery could be written out—so much rum for medicine of real value; so much for the arts of real value. That would be one drop, I suppose taken out and shaken from the distillery. Then so much sold to the Indians to excite them to scalp one another; so much sent to the Africans to be changed into slaves to rot in Cuba and Brazil, so much sent to the heathens in Asia, and to the islands in the ocean; and so much used at home. Then if the tale of every drop could be written out—so much pain, so much redness of eyes, so much diminution of productive power in man, so many houses burnt, ships foundered, and railway trains dashed to pieces; so many lives lost; so many widows made—doubly widows, because their husbands still live; so many orphans, their fathers yet living, long dying upon the earth; what a tale it would be! Imagine that persons who had suffered from torments engendered on that plague-spot, came together on ridge pole and on roof, and filled up the large hall of that distillery, and occupied the streets and lanes all about it, and told their tales of drunkenness, robbery, unchastity, murder, writen on their faces and foreheads. What a story it would be, the fact stranger than fiction!—English Paper.

SUPPRESSION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.—A public meeting of the inhabitants of Glasgow was held in the City Hall, last week, to consider the propriety of petitioning Parliament for the prohibition of distillation and brewing from, and consequent destruction of human food. Bailie M'Dowall was called to the chair. The Rev. Mr. Arnot moved a Resolution disapproving of the destruction of food by distillation. Mr. Playfair seconded the Resolution, which was unanimously approved of. Mr. Lang moved a similar Resolution, but pointed particularly against brewing from grain. Mr. Morton seconded the Resolution, which was carried with acclamation. Mr. Matthew Cullen, at great length, moved a petition in terms of the Resolutions, to be signed by the chairman, and presented to the House of Lords by the Duke of Argyle, and to the House of Commons by one of the city members. This was seconded by Mr. Livingston, and approved of.

Our friend GAINES is very much amused at the honesty of emigrationists. Right glad to see it—right glad, honesty is a virtue; and much gratified are we to find that we get credit for honesty, instead of being regarded, as was formerly the case, as traitors to the cause, alike of bond and free. But as the amusement has subsided into sober earnestness, resulting in some thoughts on the subject of an en masse emigration, we shall proceed briefly to examine them. The assertion is made, that in the United States there is no prejudice against color, and he first goes to Europe to prove it, then back to the States, and finally concludes, that as notwithstanding the prejudice, they have had three colored officials, therefore it is possible for them to have one hundred.

From the position that if there is prejudice against color in the States, it necessarily must exist in Europe, we beg to dissent most emphatically. The absence of prejudice against color in Europe, is no proof of its non-existence in the United States. The conditions on which it depends are not known there, consequently it is not.

None of the European governments have the system of negro slavery to cherish; had they, the same results would accrue as do in the United States, where the servile condition of the colored people has given rise to a prejudice such as always exists where there are such antagonisms as the positions of master and slave; and the fact that persons of African, or partly African descent only, are included in the servile class, naturally causes that prejudice to become intensified: so that when the slave becomes a freeman, the color is a bar to his progress. In Russia, when the serf becomes free, he at once takes a position along with the class to which he is promoted; while, in the States, as the color cannot be removed, a withering prejudice constantly pursues him. John Brachman is said to have found the sight of colored gentlemen and white ladies, in company, disgusting to his American taste. Was that feeling a prejudice against color or not? Marriages between white and colored persons, if it were not "for the disgust with which such unions are received in the popular heart, would be dirt cheap all over the country." Now what is this but prejudice against color? What shall we call that disgust in the popular heart? For we are told that there is an increasing number of professional men who, if competent, could do as well as competent white ones; and that as they have had three officials, there is a possibility of having more. The prejudice cannot be of condition, as they have professional men and "magistrates." Why do not these "higher classes," take position with their own class of whites. Surely, as they are now elevated in society, they should sit at the first table, take the best seats in the churches, and the boxes in the theatres. As bearing on this, we here give the observations of an Abolitionist in Nebraska,—that GREAT North West, where the Anti-Emigrationists advise the colored people of the States to go,—as cut from a States cotemporary:—

"But the greatest of all reasons why slavery will not exist here, is, I am very sorry to say, a dreadful one; but, nevertheless, a true one. Would you believe it, that multitudes of those who are such flaming Abolitionists here, as they call themselves, are a sui generis kind of Abolitionist—a mongrel character, like Aunt Ophelia, in Uncle Tom's Cabin. They are desperately opposed to slavery entering here—and why? Because they 'dont want the niggers about them.' Now, my blood ran cold within me, when I first ascertained that this was the case; but now I feel quite certain, that the very people who will vote against the introduction of slavery, will also vote for a 'Black Law.' On board our boat, at one of the meetings of our party, I proposed an amendment to our Constitution, so as to read, 'We recognise the right of every male citizen of the United States, without distinction of color, to own 160 acres of land,' &c., merely adding the words, 'without distinction of color: but it was almost unanimously negatived. I find but few who dare to say that they are in favor of allowing the colored man to come here, and buy land on equality with the white man. The common cry is, 'We want no slavery, and no niggers.' Now, although this feeling is satanic, and, to my mind, quite as bad as slavery, yet it will effectually prevent slavery, in name, from existing here. Now, what we want, is radical Abolitionists to come out here, from principle, and not from love of money. Over fifty of the voters of this place, voted for a Nebraska-bill man, and among them was Dr. Robinson; and Mr. Lum, the Orthodox clergyman, advocated the Nebraska man's election. So you see how much dependence is to be put on Eastern anti-slavery men, even, although, I am happy to inform you, 188 persons nobly 'spurned the bribe,' and did not vote for the Pierce Democrat, preferring poverty to riches obtained by striking hands with the Administration. But the spirit of pro-slavery is triumphant here. I have already been threatened by public men with a coat of tar and feathers, for daring to say that the Emigrant Aid Company of Boston has misrepresented the state of affairs here."

Again, the assertion that America will, in less than one hundred years, be proud of the Negro name, because the Norman was proud of that of a Briton, in the same period, is not founded on facts, the cases not being parallel; the Britons were conquered and enslaved on their own land. They still had their gentry, who were never wholly subdued, so that while the Saxon leaders continually exhorted their followers to seize upon the rights which had been snatched from them, the colored American leaders tell their followers to wait, not for rights, but for privileges. The Saxons could command respect even from their enemies; the colored people, by waiting for the privileges which may be extended to them, will gain only the contempt of those who otherwise might be true friends. A few words more about coloured professional men and we have done. That one colored lawyer has been admitted to the bar in Massachusetts is known; that there are a very few physicians, one or two large capitalists, a few wealthy farmers, merchants, &c., and a very large number of divines, is also true.

These constitute what, if they were white, would—though unfortunately for the no prejudice of color doctrine, they are not—be termed the upper classes of society, while a few mechanics and small farmers, with the thousands in menial occupations, make up the number. Now what is to be the result of this state of society? Owning, in comparison with the rest of the community, a very small proportion of the soil, with a strong public feeling against their becoming possessed of it, and and a prejudice,—for it is admitted that there is a prejudice which continually meets them, though presumed to be on the wane,—What remedy is there to be found other than emigration to some place where they can become possessed of the soil, and what place so easy of access as Canada? Here they will be enabled to say, in a manner which will be respected, that they have planted their tree in American soil, for having planted it on their own lands, they will not be under the disagreeable necessity of digging it up. A Plan to Kidnap Fugitives.

We copy this week, from the Montreal Gazette, a letter from a police officer of Maryland, directed to the Chief of Police in Montreal, requesting him to engage in a kidnapping scheme. While we know that such a proposition will be rejected with scorn by all loyal subjects, we would warn our brethren throughout the Provinces to be careful about venturing across the line, and indeed to keep a sharp look-out even within the borders. This plan, it will be seen, only contemplates getting them to the borders. Times are dull in the States, while the price of everything, the slaves included, is high, so that a reward, accompanied with a description, as this man promises, may tempt the hungry Yankees to any acts of villiany. Persons at Windsor, Niagara, and other places on the line should be doubly careful, and those more remote should not be tempted to the frontier by any letter from unknown parties, no matter how plausible they may seem. S.

Suffering in the States.

The suffering in the large eastern cities of the United States, in consequence of so many persons being out of employment, seems not to have abated. In Boston three soup houses have been established, in addition to the numerous other charitable institutions; and in New York, although very energetic measures have been taken to alleviate the sufferings of the destitute, the evil seems to be increasing. An exchange says that one of the wealthy firms of that city, has opened a soup kitchen in the basement of their "marble dry goods palace," where the clerks, who have entered into the spirit of their employers, give out soup every day to about five hundred. The subjoined appeal from the Tribune of the 12th, shows a sad state of affairs:—

"Destitution and suffering at the Five Points have increased to such an alarming extent within the last few weeks, that the Advisory Committee of the Ladies' Home Missionary Society have been constrained by their interest in that locality, and their intimate knowledge of its pressing wants, to take definite action in its behalf. Their simple object is to supply the destitute and perishing with bread. The mission of the "Old Brewery" has exhausted all its resources in this effort.

It is well known to those who are acquainted with that locality, that hundreds of families have sold or pawned the last article of furniture or apparel to procure food, and are now left on the bare floor, without bedding or fuel, and not knowing where they may get the next mouthful to eat. Persons in these circumstances, (many of them sober, industrious people) are thronging the mission house daily, and from stern necessity are denied relief. This state of suffering is increasing daily, and the starving must be fed.

It will require not less than one thousand loaves daily, to keep the destitute from suffering with hunger. They now call upon the public to sustain them in this effort. They make no labored appeal. The cry of suffering humanity is echoing from street to street, and cannot be unheeded. It rises above the din of commerce, and calls upon all who have happy homes, and by the blessing of Providence have a competency, to lend a helping hand to those suffering poor whom God has committed to their care. "Ye have the poor always with you," is a legacy to the whole community, and if circumstances prevent you giving personal attention to those cases of severe distress, let your gift of money represent you. Remember the truth, "that it is more blessed to give than to receive."

Donations to this object can be forwarded to J. B. Cornell, Esq., treasurer, Centre Street, New York."

☞ The dollar and cent are now a part of Canada currency, legally used on notes, contracts, and the like; but as it will be long before the terms will be used very extensively, we have inserted a table for the benefit of immigrants from the States.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR FREEMAN,—Permit me, through your columns, to communicate to your numerous readers a word from the "Queen City of the West" about matters in this region. And though on the borders of the land of oppression, more grievous than Egyptian bondage ever was, yet, there are those who willingly devote themselves, as did Moses, to guide the Israelities to the land of promise—not the Canaan over Jordan; but to Canada, truly a land of promise to the thousands of our race, who would be hunted down by the oppressors in any part of this boasted land of liberty.

When I compare the condition of our people in the two countries, it appears to me that any one with very limited information, could at once perceive the great importance of as many as possible of our people securing homes in the British Provinces. But yet we find those who would be considered leaders, opposing the subject of emigration to those Provinces; and so sagacious did one of those gentlemen appear, in guarding the public demonstrations of the people, lest they should be considered endorsing emigration sentiments, that, after a course of three of Miss M. A. Shadd's lectures on that subject, in a large assembly in Allen Chapel, at the last lecture, he made a powerful effort to drive the friends of emigration from their purpose of passing the following resolutions. And could the men and women engaged in such a noble enterprise be pursuaded or affrighted by hard speeches from opposers, they would at once prove themselves unworthy of the cause; but such was not the case. After being informed that "nine-tenths" of the people were opposed to anything that might in any way, as did those resolutions, favor the scheme of "emigration," and that the only way for us to expect any of the honor due to those who would labor in the cause was, to let it suffice to know, that the people came out en masse, and listened attentively to the speaker. Not to attempt to request the people, who were so much opposed, to pass them. But, after all, the measure was pressed, and the vote taken; and when we found who the "nine-tenths" was, it was the gentlemen who set himself up to decide for the people. And after extending his efforts, even to a breach of politeness, how chagrined he must have felt to find the whole assembly rise in favor, and he afterwards standing up as independent as if he was the "nine-tenths," finding fault of the people for voting their true sentiments on the resolutions.

The following are the preamble and resolutions:—

Whereas, We have been favored in our city in a course of three Lectures by Miss M. A. Shadd, on the subject of Emigration to the British Provinces, which has been highly instructive and gratifying. And, whereas, the Provincial Freeman, a paper published in Toronto, C. W., is edited by this distinguished advocate of emigration and her sister, therefore—

Resolved, That we do most cordially recommend the Freeman as a paper worthy of the patronage of the friends of emigration, as a reliable source of information from these Provinces.

Resolved, That we will encourage the circulation of the Freeman, in the Queen City, so as to disseminate intelligence of the facilities for our elevation in the Canadas.

Resolved, That a copy be forwarded to the Freeman.

You shall hear from us again after the papers come to hand to the subscribers.

Yours, for the cause of liberty and elevation. A.

Emigration.

"Better to bear the ills we have, than fly to others we know not of."—SHAKESPEARE.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—A thought on the emigration, en masse, of the colored people of the United States to the Canadas, Central or South America, or to Africa, may not be amiss, as it is now the theme of all others among the intelligent colored men of this country.

In presenting my views, I desire to divest them of prejudice; but I confess, that habit, custom, association, education, et cetera, have so much to do in moulding the mind, that it is almost impossible to do it. The only exception to this rule are our par excellent emigration friends, who, like the Wolf in Æsop's Fables, claim an unusual amount of honesty. If they are to be believed, they state nothing but what is true, morally; for they draw their light from the "clear upper sky," while those who oppose them, say what is false, wickedly; for they draw their impressions from the dark regions of woe. I was edified as well as amused at an eloquent lecturer, who insisted that the people, for the purpose of making up their minds to emigrate, should depend for information on emigration partizans and travellers only, so that whatever an Anti may say must not be credited. Now, this is very pretty, indeed, and doubtless reminds one of a thief defending his own case. Believe what we say, for we tell the truth; but do not believe what they say, for they tell lies. Now, an unprejudiced mind will hear both sides of the question, and then make up his own from the materials before him.

I begin, by noticing the main objections of the emigration leaders to the colored people remaining in the United States.

Firstly, that the prejudice against color is so intense, it is impossible for the man of color within the next five hundred years to be elevated to any office of trust or honor. Secondly, that the hatred runs in every vein of society, and interdicts him from rising higher than a boot-black, a waiter, or a laborer. Thirdly, that the antipathy prevents that thorough development of his manhood as would exist under other circumstances. Fourthly, that the dislike will not allow him to be a citizen; and that there is no such a thing as a colored citizen of the United States; and fifthly, that if it was possible for him to have his political rights acknowledged in every State of the Union, his vote in a contest would be neutralized by the superior numerical force of the whites.

To all of which I demur.

In the first place, I remark, there is no prejudice in the United States against color. The color only points out the object of contempt, as the peculiarities of the Puritan, in the days of Elizabeth, pointed out the object of royal hate. If it be against the color, wherever you find a white and a colored person it must be, which I know is not the case. It is not known in England, France, Germany, Mexico, the West Indies, nor in any of the continental powers of Europe. John Brachman, D. D., Professor of Natural Philosophy in an institute of South Carolina, on a recent tour to Europe, visited the burial place of the bard of Avon, and on that classic ground, observed the statues of a black gentleman and a white lady leaning tenderly on each other—the husband and the wife. In Paris, Edinburgh, and London, he saw colored gentlemen walking arm-in-arm with white ladies, in the public places, and though at first, it was disgusting to his American taste, it saluted him so often that it ceased to attract his attention. In the States, here and there colored men marry white women, and white men colored women; and were it not for the disgust with which such unions are received, in the popular heart, they would be dirt cheap all over the country.

About twelve months ago, a colored family, consisting of a mother and two daughters, took passage on a steamer from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Wheeling, Virginia. They were quite fair, and might have been taken for Germans, fresh from the Old Country. When the bell rang for dinner, they were invited out, and took their seat at the first table, beside the captain. After dinner, he was informed that niggers partook at the dinner, and the fellow went into histrics! Where are they, said he, in a tremulous voice. There! exclaimed the valet. He looked at them for some moments, for he could scarcely believe his senses; but on the strong assurance of the chambermaid, he ordered them out of the cabin down into the nursery. Now, it was not their color that subjected them to this outrage, for in complexion, they were as white as the villian who insulted them.

Prejudice is not universal, nor is it as bitter in one place as in another; but it is modified according to locality and circumstances. Hotels (as a rule) in Massachusetts are open to colored persons, whereas in New York they are shut; in Cleveland they are open, but in Cincinnati they are not; in Cleveland white and colored children go to the same schools, in Cincinnati they do not; in Cleveland, the theatre and other places of amusement are opened on terms of equality; in Cincinnati they are not; in Cleveland colored and white worship in the same church, kneel at the same table, break the same bread, drink the same wine; in Cincinnati they do not.

But, withal, Cincinnati has improved much during the last ten years, which every good citizen will bear me witness. The people are more tolerant to anti-slavery men, and they would just as soon burn the Bible as attempt to destroy another anti-slavery press. Nowhere in the valley of the West are anti-slavery lecturers treated with more respect, and their words listened to with more attention. You do not hear the word nigger so often when passing along the street; and I will say that it was the first word I was met with in Toronto, C. W. In New Orleans, colored men work on the same buildings (as leading mechanics) beside the pale faced Yankee; but such is not the case in Pennsylvania. We have had two magistrates, which is one more, I believe, than our neighbors in the Canadas can boast, and one postmaster, in Portland, Maine, during the administration of James K. Polk. Since we have had three officials, it is possible for us to have ten, twenty, or a hundred, so may our kinsmen over the Lakes.

As to the five hundred years before colored Americans can enjoy, in its broadest and fullest extent, the right of franchise, the assertion is gratuitous with the emigration gentlemen. An anti never dreamed of such folly, for they know as well as does every well informed American, that our morale is undergoing a rapid change. It would have been as much as unreasonable for the Briton of Sixteen hundred to have said that the distinction, the hatred, the enmity between the Norman and the English gentry, would not be effaced for a thousand years, as for an American negro to say that the enmity between the colored and white American races will not be obliterated for five centuries. The same influences—the power of Christianity—the amalgamation of races—the progress of letters, which facilitated its downfall in England, will efface every vestige of it from the United States. Macaulay says:—"In the time of Richard the First, the ordinary imprecation of a Norman gentleman was, 'may I become an Englishman?' His ordinary form of indignant denial was, 'Do you take me for an Englishman?' The descendant of such a gentleman, a hundred years later, was proud of the English name." And so will the descendant of the Anglo-Saxon in less than a hundred years be proud of the Negro name. The prejudice in the United States does not prevent him from rising higher than a boot-black, a waiter, &c. An uninformed Englishman or Canadian would suppose the American people of color nothing but a nation of valets des chambres. Now nothing is further from the truth.

We have lawyers, doctors, editors, orators, divines, professors, musicians, merchants, mechanics, and capitalists. Mr. Robert Morris is practising successfully at the Boston bar, and has been admitted to pleadings in the Supreme Court. James McCune Smith, M. D., a graduate of the University of Glasgow, has an extensive practice in the City of New York; he is now a member of the Historic and Philosophical Association for the promotion of Science, and lately read a paper on the Sandwich Islands, which is said by the critics to be exceedingly creditable to his head. Drs. M. Chaumette and Roudanez, the graduates of one of the best medical schools in Paris, are now doing good business in the City of New Orleans. And we have quite a number of colored gentlemen who have received their diplomas in the United States. The conceited American, although he thinks he can wash a plate, mend a coat, or make a hat, better than any body else, he has not carried this foolish notion to such a pitch as to scorn the medical attendance of a scientific colored gentleman, simply on account of his color. He would just as soon have a black finger to feel his pulse, a black intellect to prescribe for it, a black hand to prepare the medicine, as that of a white, provided it will save his life or cure the disease. Some years ago, a colored medical quack held forth in Cincinnati. He was illiterate. He could neither read nor write. He was conceited, impudent, arrogant, had not studied men in the books nor in skeletons, but had read them in herbs, roots, signs, &c. Yet he had more practice than any six members of the regular faculty. These gentlemen, as you may imagine, grew jealous, and determined to put him down, but it was no go. If you wished Dr.—— to attend to your case, you had to take your chance at his office, on ——, as you would to enter a Barnum show, and why? because he was thought the most skilful physician. Hence, competent colored men can do as well in the professions as competent white. If he has a superior intellect, and possesses as rich a fund of information as that of a Webster or a Morton, his labors will be rewarded; for mind, when possessed of power, will command respect.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Washington correspondence of the Journal of Commerce argues that the annexation of the Sandwich Islands to the United States is precluded by a pledge formerly given to France and England. He says:

"In regard to the Sandwich Islands question, it is only surprising that it was ever entertained by the present Administration, and it could not be, with proper regard for the obligations into which the United States had entered with foreign powers. It is not generally known, but it is true, and can be at any time shown, that this Government is under a distinct pledge not to acquire or take possession of those Islands. During the administration of President Taylor, and while Mr. Upshur was secretary of State, an event occurred that drew the attention of this Government to the Sandwich Islands. A British fleet, under the command of Sir George Follett, took possession of them upon some pretence, whereupon this Government made a strong remonstrance, and the British Government withdrew their pretensions. This Government, at the same time recognized the independence of the Islands, and urged the same measure upon the British Government. Lord Palmerston, with some hesitation, assented to it, not but without a most decided and explicit pledge on the part of our Government, that the United States would not acquire the Islands. Mr. Fox was the British Minister here at the time, and the pledge to which I refer was given by Mr. Upshur to him, in the correspondence on the subject. At a subsequent time, under the Administration of President Taylor, Mr. Clayton being Secretary of State, the Hawaiian princes were here, with a Commissioner, and their Mission was to offer to cede the Islands to the United States, on the condition of annexation to the Union. The proposition was not entertained, for many reasons, and one was that it would be a breach of faith towards England, France, and other commercial powers that had negotiated Hawaiian independence. Some time afterwards, while Mr. Filmore was President, and Mr. Webster Secretary of State, a difficulty in relation to the construction of a commercial treaty, arose between France and the Hawaiian Government, and the former went so far as to threaten to take forcible possession of the Islands. The United States Government again interposed for their protection, and France desisted from her purpose, and upon the understanding that their independence should be respected by all the powers that had acknowledged it, and that neither of these powers should appropriate the Islands to itself. Under these circumstances, it would be a breach of faith on our part to take the Islands, and it is not likely that we would long keep them. But there are not wanting other objections to the scheme, which would be decisive against it."

Gloomy Prospects at St. Petersburgh.

St. Petersburgh, Dec, 17.

The news of the treaty of the 2nd of December being signed has caused a great sensation in our political circles, and, together with the still dangerous state of the Empress, thrown a gloom over the Russian capital which it is difficult to describe. The court is far from being in a humor to enjoy the festivities of the approaching Christmas, the aristocracy dare not give their usual brilliant balls and entertainments, the merchants find their commerce nearly ruined, the shopkeepers have no sale for their fancy goods and articles of luxury, and the prevailing fear of coming misfortunes extends down to the very lowest classes.

Never did the Czar apply himself more vigorously to business than he does at the present momeut, working daily for sixteen hours, for he knows very well that he has no one to rely on, and that his orders, however exigent, are never executed, unless he sees them done himself. The whole system of Russian bureaucracy is so rotton that no confidence can be placed in anybody, and no one is more conversant with this fact than the Emperor himself. Count Nesselrode is still in favor, and is closeted with his royal master for several hours every day. The general opinion here is, that a war with all. Europe is inevitable, although a part of the nobles affect to believe that Austria will never be brought to draw the sword against Russia, and doubts are beginning to be seriously entertained whether it will be possible even for Prussia and the States of Germany to maintain any longer their one-sided neutrality.

The last accounts from the Crimea are anything but encouraging. The army is decimated by disease, provisions are getting short, and in the present state of the roads there is no mode of sending supplies. Great fears are entertained that Sebastopol will not be able to hold out much longer, and Mentschikoff's flaming dispatches, with his poetical description of brilliant attacks and successful sorties, with the sterotype loss of "one man killed and wounded," fail to inspire general belief any longer.

Southampton, Dec. 28.

Since my last notice of this subject the shipping of the huts for the French army in the Crimea has been proceeding very satisfactorily; and by to-morrow's dawn the Sumroo, a remarkably fine full-rigged ship of 1,000 tons, commanded by Capt. Henderson, will be ready for sea. She has taken on board 800 huts complete, and, on the vessel's arrival at her destination, they can be speedily put together and erected. There is a substantial iron stove for each hut, or barrack, and there will be ample accommodation for 30 men in each—thus the supply taken out by the Sumroo alone will be sufficient to house 9,000 comfortably.

On her main deck will be stowed in bags a large supply of coals. She will be towed out to Malta by the Reine Hortense, the private yacht of the Emperor of the French, which has been lying here during the past week. Should, however, the vessels part company in the Bay of Biscay or otherwise, in consequence of tempestuous weather, each will run for Gibraltar, which is to be the rendezvous; the Reine Hortense will there coal, and the two vessels will resume their voyage, and the coals on the deck of the Sumroo will be supplied to the Reine Hortense if necessary, before reaching Malta.

The Sumroo will be followed by the Saladdin, of 900 tons, Captain Myers, now loading, and will be ready for sea on or about Tuesday next. She has stowage for 280 huts of the same size as those conveyed by the vessels before mentioned. The William M'Cormick, a powerful steamer of 400 horse power, has been expressly chartered by the French Government to tow the Saladdin, and the same regulations will be observed, as regards towing, as by the Reine Hortense.

The Coriolanus, a fine ship of 1500 tons, whose arrival is hourly expected, will also take out about 400 huts, and will be towed by the Enniskillen, a steamer of 450 horse power, chartered from Liverpool.

The (Swiftsure (late Fatherland), a magnificent clipper of 1800 tons, is also loading, and will be got away as quickly as possible, with 500 huts. As the Swiftsure is a remarkable fast sailer, she will not be towed, but will make the best of her way to Balaklava.

Another clipper, the Falcon, is about being chartered for the French Government, and may be expected here shortly.

This much for the huts for the French army—a number that will amply accommodate, in round numbers, 45,000 men.

Each of the ships with the French huts will embark a company of French engineers, consisting of one officer, one sergeant, and six men; and the steamers used for towing will likewise take out stores of various descriptions.

The Life of P. F. Barnum.

Nothing is more important in the education of the young, than that they should be trained to love and speak the truth. The numerous instances in this work of deliberate lying in jest, or for the sake of gain, cannot fail to do harm, unless the author can be so gibbitted in public view that he shall be looked at as a shameless criminal, rather than a successful trickster. But we have little hope of this. The rebukes that may emanate from the religious press will be laid to the charge of bigotry and superstition, while the secular press, controlled as it is by a too flexible worldly morality, will not fail to clap the great showman on the back, as an ingenious, jovial, free-hearted fellow. His wealth will gild over his wickedness, and protect him like a triple coat of mail, for it is as true now as it was in the days of David, that "men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself." Besides this, there are many things in the book that are really good, and these will make the whole pass current with the multitude. Many incidents worth preservation are recorded, many valuable hints on business given, many genial and harmless pleasantries detailed, many items of useful information put down, and many of the home and fireside virtues exhibited in their most graceful forms. Could these be separated from what is positively deleterious, the book would at least be innoxious, but that would be small praise. Taken as a whole, it cannot fail to fire the imagination, and blunt the moral sensibilities of the young;—to turn away their thoughts and affections from the substantial, the beautiful, and the true, and fix them upon what is frivolous, vain and hurtful.

Wages are being reduced in many of the mechanic employing establishments of Boston.

Princely Donation.—We frequently hear of generous posthumous bequests, but it is seldom, if ever, the press has an opportunity of recording acts of a liberal character during a lifetime of those who are blessed with large fortunes. It is therefore gratifying to me to be able to bring to your notice a departure from the beaten path—so exalted in its purposes, and destined to be so productive of immeasurable good to our fellow-beings—as that which took place yesterday at Shamokin.

The Hon. Wm. E. Hoifenstein being in possession of a large body of valuable coal lands in the Shamokin region, and having a heart always open to acts calculated to ameliorate the condition of those in want, determined to dedicate forever a portion of his estate for the benefit of the destitute poor of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Lancaster, Carlisle, &c., &c.; for the endowment of a Free College, at Shamokin, and for the benefit of African Colonization.

The land to be devoted to these praiseworthy objects is in two tracts, and embraces about 600 acres of the best anthracite in the State; the one tract, for the destitute poor, is said to be capable of producing 300,000 tons per annum when properly developed, and the other tract, for the endowment of the College and African colonization, will yield, it is estimated by competent judges, 150,000 tons. At a low rental this quantity will bring in a revenue of upwards of $100,000 yearly—which is more than 6 per cent. on a million and a half of dollars. One of these tracts has already been leased, and will, the coming year, be put in operation.

Shamokin, Pa., Dec. 23, 1854.

☞ We perceive by United States papers, that a Society has actually been formed in New Orleans, to raise a subscription for the aid of the Widows and Orphans of Russians who may fall in the War. This announcement may appear incredible to many, but we regret to say, that there seems to be no doubt of it. We expect to hear next, that the Yankees will raise a monument of their sympathy for the butcher Haynau. Journal & Express.

☞ A correspondent informs the N. Y. Evening Post that our Government has appointed a commissioner who is negotiating with the authorities of Ecuador, not for the purchase of the Gallipagos Islands, but for certain commercial privileges there, and he further adds, that those negotiations have encountered "positive open hostile demonstrations from the British and French consuls" in that quarter, of which the government at Washington is a possessor of documentary proofs.—Michigan Free Democrat.

We had expected the deeds of pillage and bloodshed perpetrated by the perfidious gang of desperadoes for some time peregrinating this part of the country, and had aroused all sense of the impropriety of hoarding by large sums of money in their houses, but it appears not. On Saturday night a party of scoundrels attacked the residence of a family named Wilson, in Stamford, about two miles west of Thorald village, and after presenting three revolvers, searched the house, found $134, and decamped. Saturday night the same gang renewed their efforts, and effected an entrance into the house of Mr. Jacob Seburn, through the cellar, and in the absence of Mr. S. presented their pistols at the heads of Mrs. Seburn and daughters, ransacked the house, found nearly $900 in gold, silver and specie, and escaped with their booty. In both cases there were none but females to resist; and had it been otherwise, we think, from the preparations made, the thieves would have overcome all obstacles.—St. Catherines Constitutional.

☞ The St. Catherines Constitutional says: There is at present great scarcity of water in this vicinity, nearly every well being dry or barely affording sufficient for domestic uses; and in some instances much difficulty is experienced in providing sufficient for cattle. But as misery likes company, it will be somewhat consolatory to know that many other places are similarly circumstanced just now. How is it said, we rarely appreciate the blessings we enjoy till deprived of them.

By Telegraph.

Arrival of the "Canada."

By Montreal Line.

New York, Jan. 17th, 10½ p.m.

The steamship Canada, from Liverpool, January 6th, arrived at Halifax this afternoon.

The news, though interesting, possesses no features of special importance.

The news from the seat of war is unimportant except that the allies had, on the 28th December 300 guns in position and ready to open fire on Sebastopol; and, after a bombardment of 48 hours, it was expected the place would be stormed.

Negotiations at Vienna had been postponed 14 days further to give the Russian minister (Gortschakoff) an opportunity to communicate with his government.

Although peace was thought to be altogether improbable, it was not thought impossible.

The commercial advices per Canada are essentially the same as previously received per Baltic.

Breadstuffs were unchanged, but the markets were generally very quiet, and quotations were almost nominal. Quotations by the Baltic are repeated by the Canada.

Provisions were firm but not active, at previous prices.

Lard was dull and prices tend downward.

The London Money Market was unchanged. Consols have still further declined and closed on Friday, at 90¾ for money.

New York, Jan. 17.

The Washington correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the President has certainly determined to change his policy on the subject of foreign acquisition. That even if a treaty for the cession of the Sandwich Islands was now received it would not now be sent to the Senate, and that no effort will now be made to obtain Cuba. The same writer says that ex-Governor Seymour would not accept the mission to France.

The representatives of Six Nation Indians, who were in Washington last week, with the soldiers of 1812, are now in this city and attract general attention.

James Greene, a Conductor on the Harlem Railroad, was arrested and held to bail yesterday in the sum of $2000, on the charge of manslaughter, in causing the death of two persons in November last through gross carelessness. One of the Directors of the New Haven Railroad became his security.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher delivered the weekly lecture last evening before the New York Anti-Slavery Society, and attracted a very large audience.

We are in receipt of Galveston dates to the 14th, by which we learn that the Texan Rangers were all mustered for the service of the United States.

Mexican papers announce the organization of a party of fillibusters destined to operate against Coahuila—preparations were making to resist them.

Boston, Jan. 17.

The Cunard steamer Asia sailed this morning. She took 92 passengers for Liverpool, and 9 for Halifax.

Washington, Jan. 17.

The Union of this morning says Mr. Soule has been re-called at his own request.

A curious quarrel has broken out at Naples between the King and the Jesuits. The Neapolitan Minister of police recently sent for Father Giuseppe, the head of the order of Jesus, and informed him that he must no longer teach the "revolutionary" doctrine that the Pope is superior to all the Kings of the earth. The Minister added, that in 1848 the Jesuits had been sent out of the Kingdom "in coaches," but if they continued to teach such doctrines they would be "hunted out with kicks!" Father Giuseppe and twenty-three others, much alarmed at the threat, have published a statement professing their entire devotion to the absolute monarchy of Naples.

THE

Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE

American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

O'Neil, D. Kohoe, Jas. Stock, P. Foy, W. J. Macdonald, John Shea, M. Macnamara, S. G. Lynn, J. Wallis, Chas. Robertson, Angus Macdonell, J. P. DeLaHaye.

Trustees and Directors

Elected to serve during the present year:—

W. J. MACDONELL,—PRESIDENT,
P. J. O'NEILL,—VICE-PRESIDENT,
MESSRS. S. G. LYNN, P. FOY, & DR. HAYES,
BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

The Sound of Industry.

I love the clanging hammer,
The whirling of the plane,
The crushing of the busy saw,
The creaking of the crane,
The ringing of the anvil,
The grating of the drill,
The clattering of the turning lathe,
The whirling of the mill;
The buzzing of the spindles,
The rattling of the loom;
The clipping of the tailor's shears,
The driving of the awl,
The sounds of busy labor,
I love, I love them all.
I love the ploughman's whistle
The reaper's cheerful song,
The drover's oft-repeated shout,
As he spurs his stock along;
The bustle of the market man,
As he flies him to the town,
The din from the tree top
As the ripened fruits come down;
The busy sound of threshers,
As they clean the ripened grain,
And the husker's joke and mirth and glee,
'Neath the moonlight on the plain;
The kind voice of the drayman,
The shepherds gentle call—
These sounds of active industry
I love, I love them all.
For they tell my longing spirit,
Of the earnestness of life,
How much of all its happiness
Comes out of toil and strife?
Not the toil and strife that fainteth
And murmureth all the way,
Not the toil and strife that groaneth,
Beneath the tyrant's sway—
But the toil and strife that springeth
From face and willing heart—
A strife that ever bringeth
To the striver all his part.
O, there is a good in labor,
If we labour but aright,
A good that bringeth pleasure
And sweeter sleep by night.

RECIPES, &c.

Damson Cheese.—However much we may advocate fruit culture in our pages, we leave the cooking department to others; but there is no general rule without an exception. Therefore many ways to do many things, but there is only one way to make good Damson Cheese. Whence it took the name of cheese, we know not, unless it be from its firm, cheese-like texture, when well made—which it will be if the following recipe is adhered to:—

Put the Damsons in a stone jar, which place in an oven or on a stove until the juice runs freely, the fruit is perfectly tender and the stone separate from it. Remove the stones with a silver or wooden spoon; measure the pulp in a preserved pan, and place it on the fire and boil, until the liquid is evaporated, and the fruit is left dry. Whilst this is doing, have ready a quantity of white loaf sugar, allowing half a pound of sugar for every quart of pulp, as measured when put into the pan. Let this sugar be rolled fine, and then heated in the oven in a pan until it is so hot that the hand cannot be kept on it. In this hot state, mix the sugar thoroughly with the dry pulp, also hot from the fire. It will become very firm, and does not require to go on the fire again. Put it into jars or glasses whilst hot, and when cold, cover and put away.—Horticulturist.

Preservation of Grapes.—A traveller who lived at St. Petersburgh during the winter season, states that he ate there the freshest and most beautiful grapes he had ever seen. To preserve them they should be cut before being entirely ripe. Do not handle the berries; reject all damaged ones, then lay the grapes in a stone jar holding about thirty gallons. Fill the space between them with millet. Cover closely with a stone well fitted and cemented. Over this paste a thick paper, and let it be hermetically sealed so as to entirely exclude the air. In this tight jar the grapes ripen fully, and acquire a flavor seldom attained by any other method, and are preserved for two years in the best condition.

Grape Jelly.—Pluck the grapes from the bunches, choosing only such as are perfectly sound and ripe. Scald them slightly by heating in a porcelain kettle, and place them in a jelly bag to drain, first crushing the skins to allow the juice to exclude. To make the best jelly the bag should not be pressed, but the juice allowed to drain slowly without pressure. To one pint of the juice add a pint of white sugar, heat till dissolved and the mixture comes to a boil. Pour into tumblers, sealing them over with white paper smeared with white of egg, (which will make the paper stick to the glass,) and place them in the sun till made.

Cabbages.—There are more ways to cook a fine cabbage than to boil it with a bacon side, and yet few seem to comprehend that there can be any loss in cooking it, even in this simple way. Two-thirds of the cooks place cabbage in cold water and start it to boiling; this extracts all the best juices, and makes the pot liquor a soup. The cabbage head, after having been washed and quartered should be dropped into boiling water, with no more meat than will just season it. Cabbage may be cooked to equal broccoli or cauliflower. Take a firm, sweet head, cut it into shreds, lay it in salt and water for six hours. Now place it in boiling water until it becomes tender—turn the water off, and add sweet milk when thoroughly done; take it up in a colander and drain. Now season it with butter and pepper, and a little nutmeg grated over, and you will have a dish little resembling what are generally called greens.—Soil of the South.

Roast Beef Pudding.—Any remains of cold roast beef may be done as follows: mince about one pound of cooked meat cut in dice, put on a dish, add one teaspoonful of salt, half that of pepper, one of flour; fill your paste with it, add a gill of water; cover over as usual, shake it well, tie it up in a cloth, and boil for half an hour and serve. A little chopped onions or parsly may be introduced,

Omelettes.—Break four eggs into a basin, add half a teaspoonful of salt and a quarter ditto of pepper, beat them up well with a fork, put into the frying pan one ounce and a half of butter, lard, or oil, which put on the fire until hot; then pour in the eggs, which keep on mixing quick with a spoon until all is delicately set; then let them slip to the edge of the pan, laying hold of the handle, and raising it slantways, which will give an elongated form to the omelette; turn in the edges, let it set a moment, and turn it over on a dish, and serve.

It ought to be a nice yellow color, done to a nicety, and as light and delicate as possible; it may be served in many ways, but the following is most common:—Two table-spoonsful of milk, and an ounce of the crumb of bread cut in thin slices may be added.

Gum Arabic Starch.—Get two ounces of fine white gum arabic, and pound it to powder. Next put it into a pitcher, and pour on it a pint or more of boiling water (according to the degree of strength you desire,) and then having covered it let it set all night. In the morning pour it carefully from the dregs into a clean bottle, cork it, and keep it for use. A tablespoonful of gum water stirred into a pint of starch that has been made in the usual manner, will give to lawns (either white or printed) a look of newness to which nothing else can restore them after washing. It is also good (much diluted) for thin white muslin and bobinet.

How to Know the Age of a Horse.—The colt is born with twelve grinders. When four front teeth have made their appearance, the colt is twelve days old; and when the next four come forth, it is four weeks old. When the corner teeth appear, the colt is eight months, and when the latter have attained the height of the front teeth, it is one year old. The two year old colt has the kernal, (the dark substance in the middle of the tooth's crown), ground out of all the front teeth. In the third year the middle front teeth are being shifted; and when three years old these are substituted for the horse teeth. The next four teeth are shifted in the fourth year, and the corner teeth in the fifth. At six years the kernal is worn out of the middle front teeth, and the bridle teeth have now attained to their full growth. At seven years a hook has been formed on the corner teeth of the upper jaw; the kernal of the teeth next at the middle fronts is worn out, and the bridle teeth begin to wear off. At eight years of age, the kernal is worn out of all the lower front teeth, and begins to decrease in the middle upper fronts. In the ninth year, the kernal has wholly disappeared from the upper middle front teeth, the hook on the corner teeth has increased in size, and the bridle teeth looses their points. In the tenth year the kernal has worn out of the teeth next to the middle front of the upper jaw; and in the eleventh year the kernal has entirely vanished from the corner teeth of the same jaw. At twelve years old, the crown of all the front teeth in the lower jaw have become triangular and the bridle teeth are much wore down. As the horse advances in age, the gums shrink away from the teeth, which consequently receive a long, narrow appearance, and their kernals have become metamorphosed into a darkish point, grey hairs increase in the forehead, over the chin assumes the form of an eagle.—Practical Farmer.

Plaster of Paris and Green Manure.—In conversation not long since with Mr. Benjamin Chandler, an industrious and observing farmer in Starks, Somerset County, he observed that he had, by experiment, ascertained how he could use green or unfermented manure in the hills of corn. Formerly, whenever he put unfermented manure in the hills of corn, the corn would, instead of growing thriftily, as is the case when well rotted manure is used in this way, become yellow in color, and seems to be injured rather than benefitted by it. This is attributed to too great a supply of ammonia, or other substance liberated when the manure began to ferment.

Having read that plaster of paris would absorb and change the nature of ammonia, he tried it in this way.

After placing a shovelful of green manure in the hill, he covered it over with soil, and on this threw a large spoonful or more of Plaster of Paris, then dropped his corn and covered it. When thus planted, the corn invariably grew rank, and filled the ears as well as if the manure had been thoroughly composted and decomposed.

One spring, when planting his corn in this way, he had not plaster enough to go over the whole field, and accordingly, was under the necessity of planting a portion of it with green manure in the holes and no plaster over it.

The result was an excellent crop as far as the plaster was used, while in the remainder of the field, the corn was yellow and sickly during the whole season, and yielded comparatively little. These are important facts in the corn culture.—Maine Farmer.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

Article I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

Art. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

Art. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

Art. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

Art. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

Art. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

Art. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

Art. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

Art. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

Art. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

FORGERY.
The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and health and to place the invalid's life in danger, he would not scruple to deceive his best customers.

Dealers who wish the genuine, purchase only of established credit, not of irresponsible pedlars or travelling adventurers and impostors.

Dealers who have R. R. R. offered to them below our regular price, may rely upon the same being a counterfeit preparation. We never sell R. R. R. in large quantities for less than 10 per cent. from our regular gross price. Dealers who purchase the counterfeit and offer the same for sale, render themselves liable to prosecution.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.
THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.
By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.
By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.
By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.
By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the ascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own xclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,		per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To Editors.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,
in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,
in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. The Arts, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,
in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of Mechanical Industry, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY
and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,
in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS
will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,
we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. The Markets will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.
We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. The Children will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Poetry.

The Snow Shower.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Stand here by my side and turn, I pray,
On the lake below thy gentle eyes;
The clouds hang over it, heavy and gray,
And dark and silent the water lies;
And out of that frozen mist the snow
In wavering flakes begins to flow;
Flake after flake,
They sink in the dark and silent lake.

See how in a living swarm they come
From the chambers beyond that misty veil,
Some hover awhile in air, and some
Rush prone from the sky like summer hail,
All dropping swiftly or settling slow,
Meet, and are still in the depth below;
Flake after flake,
Dissolved in the dark and silent lake.

Here delicate snow-stars, out of the cloud
Come floating downward in airy play,
Like spangles dropped from the glistening crowd
That whiten by night the milky way;
There broader and burlier masses fall:
The sullen water buries them all;
Flake after flake,
All drowned in the dark and silent lake.

And some, as on tender wings they glide
From their chilly birth cloud, dim and gray,
Are joined in their fall, and side by side,
Come clinging along their unsteady way;
As friend with friend, or husband with wife;
Make hand in hand the passage of life;
Each mated flake
Soon sinks in the dark and silent lake.

Lo! while we are gazing, in swifter haste
Stream down the snows, till the air is white,
As, myriads by myriads madly chased,
They fling themselves from their shadowy height.
The fair frail creatures of middle sky,
What speed they make, with their grave so nigh;
Flake after flake,
To lie in the dark and silent lake.

I see in thy gentle eyes a tear;
They turn to me in sorrowful thought;
Thou thinkest of friends, the good and dear,
Who were for a time, and now are not;
Like these fair children of cloud and frost,
That glisten a moment and then are lost,
Flake after flake,
All lost in the dark and silent lake.

Yet look again, for the clouds divide;
A gleam of blue on the water lies:
And far away on the mountain side,
A sunbeam falls from the opening skies.
But the hurrying host that flow between
The cloud and the water no more is seen;
Flake after flake,
At rest in the dark and silent lake.

The Paper Difficulty.

Our readers can hardly be ignorant of the fact, that the materials for English paper are becoming somewhat scarce. Not many weeks ago, the proprietors of a leading London journal offered a prize or premium of £1000, to any one who could discover a new material for paper. Certain conditions were attached, relating to the continuous and abundant supply of the material, the capability of converting it into fine pulp, the power of bleaching it, and the price at which it could be sold. We are not aware that, up to the present time, the premium has been claimed.

It is not to be wondered at that men should seek for new materials for paper. Rags are limited in quantity, and flax is expensive if grown professedly for paper making purposes; and hence an inquiry would naturally arise, whether any cheap substitute could be found. We seem to be busy on this subject just now, but men were quite as busy in the last century. We have now before us a remarkable exemplar of this activity. It is in the form of a book, descriptive of the manufacture of paper from various vegetable substances; and the leaves of the book are made of the very paper so described. The author and maker of the book was Jacob Christian Schaffer, a pastor at Ratisbon. The book is a little volume of about sixty leaves, all formed of different substances: the bark of the willow, the beech, the aspen, the hawthorn, the linden, and the mulberry; the down of the catkins of the black poplar, the silky down of the asclepias, the tendrils of the vine, the stalks of nettle, mugwort, dyers-weed; leaves, bark, liber, stalks, reeds, straws, moss, lichens, wood-shavings, saw-dust, potatoes, fircones—nothing came amiss to Schaffer; he made paper from all of them. He was almost paper mad; and people were wont to bring all kinds of odd substances to him, with a query as to whether he could convert them into paper. These specimens of paper, made eighty years ago, are certainly the homeliest of the homely—queer in colour, and queer in texture. Soon afterwards, a French marquis, unknown to fame in other respects, printed a small volume of his own poems on paper derived from some of those unusual sources; but, so far as we can judge, the poems and the paper seem to be about equal in quality.

That fibrous vegetable substances can be beaten into a pulp, and then made into paper, has been abundantly proved. At this present time, there are various kinds of straw-paper manufactured; and not very long ago, a highly sanguine announcement was made of a new process for converting deal-shavings into paper. We may be allowed to say, that these attempts, up to the present time, have never exactly met the requirements of paper-consumers. Either the paper is too weak, or too brittle, or too spongy, or too rough, or too badly coloured, or too scanty in quantity, or too high in price; there is something wrong in each or all of them.

The rags employed in paper making are mostly linen, prepared from flax; but cotton rags, from calico, also assist in making up the supply. Flax being the stronger fibre of the two, linen rags make stronger paper than cotton rags. The sweepings of cotton-mills also contribute towards the supply. As to the varitable linen rags themselves, we import some from abroad—our own shirt-wearers do not yield sufficient for the wants of our paper-makers. The rag-merchants buy from Germany, Hungary, Italy, Sicily, and other continental countries—from any and everywhere, indeed, where rag export is permitted; for it is worthy of remark, as a proof of the importance attached to this subject, that many foreign governments prohibit the export of this material. Italy and Sicily are linen-wearing but not book making countries; and this is to a great extent the case in Hungary and South Germany; hence those countries have rags to sell, and have no particular objection to sell them. There are some rags, however, obtained from more northern parts of Europe. Here the rag-dealers are furnished with a peculiar sort of exponent of social advancement: they always know English rags from foreign by being in a cleaner state; and German from Italian, by being cleaner. The English housewife will mend and mend her boy's pinafore, or her husband's shirt, as long as it will hold decently together; but whether sound or dilapidated, she washes it well and oft, and it reaches the rag bag in a cleaner state than the cast-off garments of most other countries. Five or six thousand tons of foreign rags are imported yearly by or for our paper makers, in addition to that which reaches the shops of the 'marine store' dealers in all our large towns. About twenty guineas a ton is a sort of average price given for foreign rags—a guinea or so per hundredweight. The rags come over in bags containing 400 or 500 pounds each. But there are two or three points of serious importance here. Foreign countries require so much more paper-making materials than formerly, and America puts forth such an insatiable demand, that the foreign rags at the disposal of England are actually less than they were in amount twenty years ago. And this, too, at a time when our paper-making is so largely increasing. From present indications, it appears probable that British paper-making in 1854 will not fall far short of 200,000,000 pounds.

It is obvious at a glance, that the supply of rags must depend upon the quantity of worn-out garments. A garment, so long as it is worth anything in wear, must certainly be worth more than 2d. or 3d. per pound—its value when regarded as linen rag; its flaxen career as a shirt or a pinafore must have been finished ere its career as a rag begins. There is a curious metamorphosis observable in the history of these vegetable fibres. It has been remarked, as being within the bounds of possibility—almost of probability—that the papier-machie ornament of a man's room may once have been a book which he had read, and that this book may once have been a shirt which he had worn. However, passing over this fanciful hypothesis, we came to this practical question: 'If flax be plentiful, and worn-out linen garments be scarce, why not use flax itself as a material for paper?' Just because price affects it; a pound of dressed flax sells for very much more than a pound of linen rags; and a pound of clean cotton sells for much more than a pound of dirty fragmentary sweepings from a cotton mill; hence, although the flax and the good cotton are more abundant than the rags and the sweepings, their price is such as would revolutionise the paper trade if they were adopted. Unless this question of price be borne in mind, the real nature of the paper difficulty cannot be well understood.

A few weeks ago, a correspondent of the Builder, in allusion to the reward of £1000 offered for the discovery of a new paper-making material, asked: 'Might I suggest that if a similar reward was offered to chemists or manufacturers for a plan to reduce paper again to its primitive pulp, and then to discharge from it the printer's ink, the same end would be obtained? In the present day there are tons of paper stained with productions of an ephemeral nature—returns to parliament, to wit—which might do duty over and over again, with no loss to the public; on the contrary, there are few persons, even with a moderate supply of printed material, who would not be happy to contribute to the paper-bleecher, saving both binding and shelf-room.' This communication brought up a correspondent to the Athenæum, a week or two afterwards. He stated that, having had his attention brought to the subject, it had struck him that the removal of the ink from printed paper might be effected with ease by a very simple chemical process. He therefore put his theory to the test of experiment, and met with a satisfactory result. He enclosed to the editor a specimen of an octavo leaf, which had been printed on both sides; he had subjected it to a particular process, whereby it had been reduced to the state of a clean pulp; but not having at command any efficient apparatus for pressing and finishing, the newly-prepared leaf of paper presented a certain coarseness and roughness of appearance. The editor confined himself simply to a statement of the fact, that the leaf of paper enclosed was certainly free from ink. This communication, in its turn called forth another from a correspondent, who gave his name, and who had visions of patent-property in his mind. He stated that, ever since the announcement of the increasing scarcity of paper, he had directed his attention experimentally to the matter, and had succeeded in devising a beautiful, inexpensive, and effective method of utilising waste paper. Having brought his process to a satisfactory point, he lodged a specification, and applied for letters-patent in July last. In the verbose and formal language of the Patent-office, his invention is 'for a method of treating all kinds of paper whereon any printing, &c., has been printed or impressed, so that the same may be completely removed, discharged, or obliterated, from the paper; and so that it may be either re-used in sheets, or be reconverted and worked up again into its primitive pulp by the ordinary methods, and be again manufactured into and used as paper.'

Thus much, then, for the projects for re-employing old printed paper. They are, it will be perceived, in the same condition as many other projects—not yet openly described, but kept private until the inventors ascertain whether they can obtain any profitable results from them.*

While individual inventors have been thus engaged, the government has not been altogether idle in the matter. In the early part of the present year, the Treasury drew the attention of the Board of Trade to the scarcity of the materials for paper. It was urged that the supply of rags had lessened and the price increased, and that it was incumbent to inquire whether any other material could be substituted. To aid in this inquiry, it was suggested that the Foreign Office should transmit circulars to all British consuls abroad, requesting them to collect such information as might be within their reach, bearing on this point. The secretary to the Treasury said: 'In doing this, it would have to be borne in mind, that the great essential of such an article must be its cheapness, to cover the high freights now prevailing, and which it may be anticipated, will prevail for some time. As regards the nature of the article, my lords are informed, that with the exception of jute, canvas, and gunney-bagging, every description of vegetable fibre is now capable of being bleached, and is available for fine paper. Reeds and rushes, the inner bark of many trees, and several kinds of vegetable fibre in warm or tropical climates, are substances likely to be of service, especially where they could be imported as dunnage among the cargo, or in compressed bales; but quantity and steadiness of supply are essential. As regards price, my lords understand that if the article could be laid down so as to cost from 2d. to 2½d. per pound, without reckoning the cost of preparation, it would be sufficiently low to answer the purpose in view.'

To the communication, a reply was sent some time afterwards by Dr. Lyon Playfair, on the part of the Board of Trade. Dr. Playfair mentioned many curious facts in connection with the scarcity of paper-making material. The strikes and lock-outs at Preston and elsewhere had been found to effect the supply, by lessening the quantity of cotton worked up at the mills, and consequently lessening the amount of waste resulting from the working. Another fact is, that the railways companies use now so much cotton-waste in oiling and wiping their machinery, that this again lessons the quantity available for the paper-maker. A third point is, that the Americans, having no paper-duty or stamp-duty to pay, can afford to give more for rags than our own paper-makers can; and they buy rags in London and Liverpool for the American market, thereby further lessening our store. Dr. Playfair points out that the cause of failure in most other attempts to provide paper-making materials, has usually been one of these three—that the expense of preparing the fibres is too great; that the loss of weight in preparing is too great; or that the material cannot be well bleached. He further states that, having consulted with the chief paper-manufacturers, he finds that any new fibrous material must, to be serviceable, be obtainable at a lower price than that named by the Treasury—not exceeding one penny or three-halfpence per pound.

It is not improbable that British consuls are at this time collecting information in foreign countries respecting fibrous materials available for paper, and that we shall learn more on the matter by and by.

About Easter last, Dr. Forbes Royle read before the Society of Arts a valuable paper on the fibrous substances of India. He entered into a minute examination of the various plants of this kind: where they grow; to what extent they are abundant; from what port they might be shipped; at what price they could be obtained; to what purposes they are already applied; to what other purposes they might probably be applicable. From the discussion which followed the reading of this paper, it appears that naturalists have had their attention strongly directed to this subject for some time past. There has been even talk of a company for making paper from West India plants.

The inventors are looking out sharply for new processes, to be rendered available as soon as the botanists and naturalists have done their part of the work. We meet with sanguine descriptions on all sides of us. The Long Island Vindicator describes a recent invention for utilising a plant which grows abundantly in poor lands, and which can be brought into the state of pulp for one-sixth of a cent per pound; while another invention can make this pulp into paper at four cents per pound. Then there is the invention by M. Vivien, of Paris, whereby the leaves of ordinary trees are gathered, compressed into cakes, steeped in limewater or alkaline solution, washed clean, ground to pulp, and made into paper. Then, again, there is M. M. Hartman and Schlesinger's wood-pulp process, which is, to say the least of it, curious and interesting. A tree is cut into blocks or logs; each block is pressed heavily against a grindstone; the grindstone is made to rotate two hundred times per minute; and the wood, wetted and ground at once, is rubbed off in the state of a very fine pulp. This wood-pulp, mixed with rag-pulp in ratios varying from 10 to 90 per cent., produces paper of various kinds. The goodness of the paper, and the price at which it can be sold, will of course determine the fate of this as well as other projects of paper making.

The reader will now be in a position to know something concerning the nature and extent of the Paper Difficulty, and to welcome any improvements bearing on the subject.—Chambers' Journal.

* Has it never occurred to any of the experimentalists, to try to ascertain the process by which the Russian police authorities clear foreign newspapers of their objectionable articles? A process employed in such a manner must needs be inexpensive, and might therefore be expected to prove available for the object in view.—ED

Chinese Love-Letters.

FROM THE GERMAN OF THE CRIMINAL ZEITUNG.

A marriage was recently celebrated in Amoy, between a son of the old family of the "Tan" and a daughter of the equally old and respectable family of the "O." The following is a literal translation of the letters which were exchanged between the fathers of the young couple.

We give first the proposal of the father of the bridegroom.

"The younger brother, with the first name Su and the surname Tan, presents his compliments most humbly, and with washed head, and sends this letter to the virtuous and noble lord whose name is O—the aged teacher and the great man—laying it at the foot of the gallery. At this time of the year the firmament is vailed in mist, mirrowing the beauty of hill, and vale and river; in the fields of the blue jewel are rows of pastures thickly crowded together, and everywhere streams forth the beginning of enlivening influences, adding new blessings to the blessings of the year that has passed.

"I duly salute thy doors! The race of the Su-country springs from a good stock, and so, too, is the origin of the lady of the Hui-country good; but how much more rare and sublime is thy character! I am ashamed in thy presence, Thou hast been very indulgent and gracious towards me, in that thou hast listened to my words, and given Miss O to my eldest son, Kang by name, to wife; this consent of thine is worth more to me than a thousand pieces of gold. The nuptials shall take place according to the six rules of property, and I engage to inform my ancestors of the business. There shall be no lack of gems and silks. The things which thou hast sent me in a basket I will so arrange that every one who crosses my threshhold sha l be delighted with them. Hereafter the two sirnames shall be united, and I hope that the union will endure a hundred years, and be productive of joy like that which prevailed at the union of the two countries, China and Chin. I hope that thine estimable goodness and considerateness will never cease to guard me. I salute thee most respectfully.

MR. SU."

To this outburst of politeness, modesty, and grace, the father of the youthful Miss O answers in the same humble and courteous tone, as follows:

"The younger brother, with the first name Tu and the sirname O, of the family whose relationship is sought through marriage, washes his head clean, bends neck and knee, and sends to the far-renowned and virtuous lord whose name is Tan, to the honorable teacher, and great man, the following marriage-letter in answer:

"At this time of the year the heart of the flowers begin to expand, verdancy shoots forth from the eyebrows of the pastures, and when the flowers are waving in the wind they put on their perfect glory. Under such auspices a union may be consummated which shall last a hundred years. I bring my greeting to thy lofty door. The omens are good; equally favorable are the prognostications from the flight of birds. The stars are clear and the dragons are in conjunction. I, the stupid, am ashamed because of my baseness. For a long time I have wished thy dragon might, and now thou lookest upon me, not only not with contempt, but art willing to give thy son, Mr. Kang, to my humble daughter for a husband. It is the wish of us all that the hair of the maiden should be put in order, and that the young man should put on the cap of manhood. The gala-flowers look wonderfully beautiful, and the red plums also. I praise thy son, who is like a handsome steed that may dare to cross the river in spite of wind and weather, while my puny daughter resembles a poor pasture and a weak plant, and is not worthy of being celebrated in a verse.

"I bow myself now humbly before thy friendly words, and hope that with thy well-known goodness thou wilt remember me continually and to the end. I pay thee my compliments. May the future be a happy one."

The modesty of the old gentlemen is so humiliating, not only to themselves, but to the bridegroom and the bride, that these last could hardly have been pleased at the contents of the letter; but it is certain that they soon forgot their vexation, if they had any, for our friend to whom we are indebted for these jewels of letters, was present at the wedding, and assures us that they danced, played, and made away with an enormous amount of black tea, from cocoa and shell cups.

The letters are not less remarkable for their interior worth than for their exterior splendor. They are written on sheets as large as a small newspaper, and have a border of stiffer paper, within which is a rich crimson paper, with the words LOVE and MODESTY printed in golden characters. May the union of the gallant Su Tan, Junr., and the lovely Miss Tu O be a long and happy one.

ORIGIN OF COWPER'S "JOHN GILPIN."—It happened one afternoon, in those years when Cowper's accomplished friend, Lady Austen, made a part of his little evening circle, that she observed him sinking into increased dejection; it was her custom on these occasions, to try all the resources of her sprighly powers for his immediate relief. She told him the story of John Gilpin, (which had been treasured in her memory from her childhood), to dissipate the gloom of the passing hour. Its effects on the fancy of Cowper had the air of enchantment. He informed her the next morning that convulsions of laughter, brought on by the recollections of her story, had kept him waking during the greatest part of the night! and that he had turned it into a ballad. So arose the pleasant poem of John Gilpin. To Lady Austen's suggestion, also, we are indebted for the poem of "the Task."—Life of Cowper.

The Crystal Palace.

During the three days of the Christmas holidays, upwards of 30,000 people visited the Palace, and considering the rivalry of the thousand and one places of amusement in town, the inclemency of the weather and the unfinished character of the works and grounds, it is a great proof of the estimation in which this attractive place of amusement is held by the people. The Christmas Tree still flourishes, and with a never-failing supply of bonbons and delicious fruits; but it is not to remain on view beyond the 6th of January. The five military bands have also daily attended, and are to attend during this week. The progress of the works yet required to complete the palace and grounds is satisfactory. The whole of the water displays will be completed and ready for exhibition for the first time on the 10th of June next, the anniversary of the opening of the palace. The smaller fountains on the terraces are finished, although not at present worked, and however great may be the expectations which are indulged in with respect to these promised water displays, it is fully believed that they will fall far short of the spectacle which will be presented on the 10th of next June. In the geological department, also, great progress is made; the water has now nearly filled the lake, and many of the largest of the antediluvian monsters, painted au naturel, now enjoy their amphibious existence. There is every reason to believe that by the 10th of June next all the representations of extinct species will be completed, and that there will not be an extinct animal nor monstrous brute known to geologists but will find a representative of his kind reconstructed and occupying his appropriate place in this unique assembly of the great pre-Adamites. It has been proposed to carry a line of railway, solely devoted to the Crystal Palace, across the Thames, by Hungerford Suspension-bridge, into Hungerford market; and if this plan were carried out, there is no doubt that it would insure a vast accession to the number of daily visitors to the palace. The situation for a station would be so central, that no one would feel the inconvenience they do now before they can reach the station of the line that carries them to Sydenham.—English Paper.

The Upright Man of Business.

There is no being in the world for whom I feel a higher moral respect and admiration, than for the upright man of business No not for the philanthropist, the missionary, or the martyr. I feel that I could more easily be a martyr, than a man of that lofty moral uprightness. And let me say yet more distinctly, that it is not for the generous man that I feel this kind of respect. Generosity seems to me a low quality, a mere impulse, compared with the lofty virtues I speak of. It is not for the man who distributes charities—who bestows magnificent donations. That may all do very well. I speak not to disparage it. I wish there was more of it; and yet it may all exist with a want of the true, lofty, unbending uprightness. That is not the man, then, of whom I speak; but it is he who stands amidst all the interest and perilous exigencies of trade, firm, calm, disinterested and upright. It is the man who can see another man's distress as well as his own. It is the man whose mind his own advantage does not blind for an instant—who can sit a judge upon a question between himself and his neighbor, just as safely as the purest magistrate upon the bench of justice.

Ah! how much richer than ermine—how far nobler than a train of magisterial authority—how more awful than the guarded pomp of majestic truth! Yet it is the man who is true—true to himself, his neighbor and his God—true to his conscience; and who feels that the slightest suggestion of that conscience is more to him than the chance of acquiring an hundred estates.

The Snow of Age.

We have just stumbled upon the following pretty piece of mosaic, lying amid a multitude of others less attractive:—

"No snow falls lighter than the snow of age, but none lies heavier, for it never melts."

The figure is by no means novel, but the closing part of the sentence is quite new as well as emphatic. The Scriptures represent age by the almond tree, which bears blossoms of the purest white.

"The almond tree shall flourish"—the head shall be hoary. Dickens says of one of his characters, whose hair was turning gray, that it looked as if Time had lightly splashed his snows upon it on passing.

"It never melts"—no never. Age is inexorable; its wheels must move onward—they know no retrograde movement. The man may sit and sing—"I would I were a boy again," but he grows old while he sings. He may read of the elixir of youth; but he never can find it; he may sigh for the alchemy, which will make him young again; but his sighing brings it not.

He may gaze backward with longing eyes, on the rosy schemes of early years; but as one who gazes at his home, from the deck of a departing ship, every moment carry him further and further away. Poor old man! he has little more to do than die.

"It never melts." The snow of winter comes and casts its blossoms in the valley and on the mountain; but sweet spring comes and smiles it all away. Not so with that upon the brow of the veteran, there is no spring whose warmth can penetrate its eternal frost. It came to stay; its single flakes fell unnoticed, now it is drilled there. We shall see it increase until we lay the old man in the grave; there it will be absorbed in eternal darkness, for there is no age in heaven.

Yet why speak of age in a mournful strain? It is beautiful, honorable and eloquent. Should we sigh at the proximity of death, when the world is so full of emptiness? Let the old exult because they are old; if any weep let it be the young, at the long succession of cares that are before them. Welcome the snow, for it is the emblem of peace and rest. It is a temporal crown, which shall fall at the gates of paradise to be replaced with a brighter and better.

THE VALUE OF POLITENESS.—Mr. Butler, of Providence, Rhode Island, a millionaire, who died some six years ago, was so obliging that he re-opened his store one night, solely to supply a little girl with a spool of thread which she wanted. The incident became known—Mr. B. was a young man at the time—and the trading public wisely thought that his accommodating spirit, as shown in this trifling affair, and in the general conduct of his business, deserved a good run of custom, which they gave, and placed him on the track of high prosperity. He subscribed $40,000 towards founding a Hospital for the insane, in Rhode Island, through the benevolent importunities of Miss Dix, for he was too polite to shake her off, though almost as penurious as she persevering.

Last year, forty-five persons died in the United States who had attained the age of one hundred years or more. Twenty-seven of them were women. Twelve were colored persons. The oldest white man was 107; the oldest white woman was 121; the oldest colored man was 113; the oldest colored woman was 146! The British census, just published, gives several remarkable instances of longevity. Thomas Parr lived 152 years and nine months. Henry Jenkins 169 years. But still more remarkable, according to the parish register of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, Thomas Carn died on the 28th of January, 1588, aged 207 years. From 1759 to 1780, forty-eight persons died, the youngest of whom was 130, and the eldest 175. In 1797 a mulatto died in Fredericton, North America, said to be 180.—Life Illustrated.

How Much Tobacco is Used.

The present annual production of tobacco is estimated to be 4,000,000,000 pounds—four billions of pounds! This is all smoked, chewed, or snuffed. Suppose it all made into cigars, one hundred to the pound, it would produce 400,000,000,000. Four hundred billions of cigars! These cigars at the usual length—four inches—if joined together, would form one continuous cigar 25, 252,520 miles long, which would encircle the earth more than one thousand times. Cut up into equal pieces, 240,000 miles in length there would be over one thousand cigars which would extend from the centre of the earth to the centre of the moon.

Put these cigars into boxes 10 inches long, 4 inches wide, and three inches high—100 to the box—it would require 4,000,000,000 boxes. Pile up these boxes in a solid mass, and they would occupy a space of 294,444, 444—two hundred and ninety-four million cubic feet! If piled up 20 feet high, they would cover a farm of 338 acres, and if laid side by side, the boxes would cover very nearly 20,000 acres. Let some boy who reads this, estimate how large a village, or city would be required to furnish store houses, for all these boxes.

If a person smoke a cigar every 20 minutes, and continue this night and day, it would require an army of 2,500 such smokers 6,000 years to consume the above; and if each person smoked only four cigars a day—a pretty fair allowance we should say—it would take 45,000 smokers 6,000 years—a larger term than the human race has existed—to smoke up all the tobacco now produced in a single year.

Allowing this tobacco unmanufactured to cost on the average ten cents a pound, and we have 400,000,000 of dollars expended every year in producing a noxious, deleterious weed. At least one and a half times as much more is required to manufacture it into marketable form and disposed of to the consumer. At the very lowest estimate then, the human family expend every year one thousand million of dollars in the gratification of an acquired habit—or one dollar for every man, woman, and child upon the earth!!

This sum would build two railroads around the earth at a cost of twenty thousand dollars per mile, or sixteen railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It would build one hundred thousand churches costing $10,000 each; or half a million of school-houses, costing $2,000 each; or one million of dwellings, costing $1,000 each. It would employ one million of preachers, and one million of teachers, giving each a salary of $500. It would support three and one-third millions of young men at college, giving each $300 per annum for expenses. We leave others to fill out the picture. Is this annual outlay to increase or decrease in future? Reader, how much do you contribute to this fund?—American Agriculturist.

WAR ITEMS.

General Osten Sacken, permanently appointed commander of the 4th infantry corps of the Russian army, has succeeded to the chief command at Sebastopol.

Miss Stanley, daughter of the late Bishop of Norwich, has sailed with additional nurses for the East, to reinforce the corps under the direction of Miss Nightingale. Miss Stanley is cousin of Lord Alderley, and the Hon. W. O. Stanley, M. P. for Chester.

Within the last few days, 2,000 stoves and about 25,000 feet of pipe have arrived at Southampton for shipment in French vessels for the Crimea. We understand that this large quantity of stoves and pipe has been made in about six days by Kennard & Co., of London.

An earnest and eloquent appeal to the country to strengthen the ranks of the British army in the Crimea has appeared from the pen of the Rev. S. G. Osborne, who has just returned home after a nearly six weeks' stay in the Hospital at Scutari.

The government transport, 161 sailed from Torbay on Wednesday, laden with provisions, stores, and munitions of war for Balaklava.

The board of ordnance has entered into contracts with the Straiheden Foundry, Cupar, for the immediate supply of 35,000 cannon balls.

There are two vessels now fitting at Deptford, the Albert and Robert Stephenson, intended for the Crimea, one of which is to be furnished with a steam flour grinding machine, the other with ovens, in order to furnish the troops before Sebastopol with fresh bread.

The Clyde steam transport No. 145 with a few troops and a cargo of stores for the seat of war in the Crimea, left Portsmouth on Wednesday morning. She carried out also three more huge cases of waterproof warm clothing.

Authograph Letter of the Queen.

Perhaps, since the commencement of the campaign no document has found its way to the public so gratifying in its nature as that which we here subjoin. The earnest expression of her Majesty's anxiety for the brave men who have been wounded in the service of the country will have the best effect in the army; it will console the unfortunate who have already suffered, and animate to increased exertion their comrades who have hitherto escaped the accidents of war.

The letter was addressed by Her Most Gracious Majesty to Mr. Sidney Herbert, by whom it was transmitted to Miss Nightingale:—

"Windsor Castle, Dec. 6, 1854.

"Would you tell Mrs Herbert that I begged she would let me see frequently the accounts she receives from Miss Nightingale or Mrs. Bracebridge, as I hear no details of the wounded, tho' I see so many from officers, &c., about the battlefield, and naturally the former must interest me more than any one.

"Let Mrs. Herbert also know that I wish Miss Nightingale, and the ladies, would tell these poor noble wounded sick men that NO ONE takes a warmer interest, or feels more for their sufferings, or admires their courage and heroism MORE than their Queen. Day and Night she thinks of her beloved troops. So does the Prince.

"Beg Mrs. Herbert to communicate these my words to those ladies, as I know that our sympathy is much valued by these noble fellows.

Foreign Review.

The Letter of Louis Napoleon has been the subject of extensive commentary, and by the Liberal portion of the Press generally and highly approved. It is considered a document which reflects with honour both on the Emperor and his Government, and which speaks well for the Alliance which obtains between England and France. In the Chambers all is unity, satisfaction, zeal, and loyalty. The propositions of the Government have met with the most cordial reception. The Emperor, with his usual tact, has signalised the Christmas by a present to each of his Officers of the Army in the East.

A Conference was held at Vienna, on the 28th December, when the Representatives of the Four Powers signed a protocol expounding their views of the Four Points in such a manner as to prevent all mistake on the subject in future. Prussia, of course, from the position she has taken, was not represented there. The Conference, having completed its exposition, entered into communication with the Russian Ambassador at Vienna. That great functionary stated, however, that he had no authority to enter upon negotiations for Peace; and plainly intimated his conviction that the Emperor Nicholas would not comply with the terms proposed. After making this statement, he signified that he required time to consult His Imperial Majesty; and for this end he requested an interval of fourteen days.

Such, then, is the somewhat awful state of things at the present moment. The peace of the world depends on the whim of a single individual. If Nicholas concur in the righteous propositions, there will be a suspension of hostilities; if not, the War will go on, with all its waste of men and money, for some time longer.—British Banner.

From the Second Edition of The Times, 5th Jan.

Express from Paris.

The following is our Paris correspondent's letter, dated yesterday, 6 p. m.:

The ordinary correspondence from Constantinople, dated the 25th, completes the details received by means of the telegraph yesterday from Marseilles. The various letters concur in stating that, in consequence of the lines, the communication between Sebastopol and the army of Prince Menschikoff became very difficult, that the corps of Gen. Liprandi, which held the heights of Balaklava, and menaced the right of the Allies, had retired behind the Tchernaya as far as Simpheropol, and that but for the bad weather which still contravenes the plans of the Generals, and arrests the works commenced, we should be ready within a very short time to take a vigorously offensive attitude against the place and its defenders.

Otherwise the last report of General Canrobert, dated the 22nd, and published in the Moniteur, shows the excellent spirit of of the troops, the perfect cordiality which reigns between the Allies, and the importance of the works executed with a view to the great object of all, the taking of Sebastopol.

It seems now to be placed beyond doubt that it is at Eupatoria that the contingents of Omar Pasha are to land, and the retreat of the division of Liprandi is attributed to the necessity the Russians are under of opposing a part of their force to that diversion. It is, therefore, considered probable that the arrival of the 30,000 Ottomans will be the signal for the attack. We have, it appears, 250 guns in batteries. Indeed, all seems prepared—fascines to fill up the ditches, ladders of all sizes to mount the walls, and every other material necessary for so terrible an operation.

A private letter from a French officer of Engineers speaks in the most confident manner of the impregnable nature of the position occupied by the troops. He declares that no power on earth is capable of dislodging them. The wet weather, which has turned the ground into lakes of mud, stops all working, but the same cause operates on the other side and disables the Russians also, who are in a miserable condition. The French army has abundance of food, good clothes and shelter from the weather; in fact, the greatest care is taken of them, and the men are contented, in excellent spirits and still admirably organized.

The writer alludes to the condition of the English army, or rather what was an army, in terms not of offensive contrast, but of natural compassion and admiration at the patience under such privations. Nevertheless, it is enough to make the cheek burn with shame and indignation to hear the accounts in some of the letters received by French families who have their relatives with the army, at the miserable state to which the grossest ignorance and the most culpable mismanagement have reduced the fine body of men who left the shores of England for the East.

Out of regard for the feelings of the country these letters are scarcely ever permitted to see the light, unless in a modified form, and it is not always that they are allowed to be read by persons who are not friends of the family. It is the opinion of the persons who writes the letter I particularly allude to, that no Russian army in the Crimea can ever amount to more than 80,000 men at the most.

Official Despatch from the Allied Camp.

Marshall Vaillant, French Minister of War, has received the following report, dated Dec. 25, 1854, from General Canrobert:

"Monsieur le Marechal.—The bad weather has been prolonged until now, with rare and brief intervals of improvement; nevertheless we continue as much as possible the work of enclosing the place with our trenches, and although the rains make the movement of vehicles difficult, all the siege works are growing to completeness and consolidation.

"The two armies reciprocally assist each other. To the English army I am indebted for the conveyance by water, of nearly all the cavalry at my disposal in the Crimea, and on my part I have placed at Lord Raglan's disposal sumpter horses for removing his sick to Balaklava, and teams for the conveyance of his supplies. These exchanges contribute to keep up excellent relations and perfect cordiality between the two armies.

"Hardly a night passes in which our advanced works are not attacked in a sortie of the enemy. These attempts generally cost the assailants dear. Yesterday, at 2 o'clock in the morning, the Russians, after making a sortie against the third parallel of the English, who vigorously repulsed them, made a similar demonstration against the centre and left of our works. Received with a very lively and well-directed fire, they retired before our soldiers, who pursued them with the bayonet. The enemy left a great number of dead upon the field.

"In order to render the protection of the trenches more efficient, I have organized a corps of volunteers whose peculiar duty it is to reconnoitre the approach to our works during the night. This institution completes that of the sharpshooters (francs-tireurs) organized at the commencement of the siege, and who do duty by day in our trenches themselves. They have already done a great deal of harm to the enemy.

"As I have already announced to you, our works now extend to the Bottom of the Quarantine bay. The enemy shows that he is not inattentive to our progress on that side, and his guns hotly dispute the ground with us, where we are obliged, as we are nearly everywhere, to dig into the solid rock. But our progress is not the less real, and we remain in possession.

"I have already informed you that the enemy has withdrawn his left, and evacuated those points in the valley of Balaklava where we had previously seen him in large masses. The day before yesterday, wishing to ascertain the situation he had taken up in that direction, I sent out a force consisting of cavalry brigade, under the command of General d'Allonville, to reconnoitre as far as the village of Tchourgouna. Behind the village of Kamara they fell in with a few hundred sharpshooters, whom they drove back into the ravines. Some groups of cavalry, accompanied by their artillery, and a few battallions of infantry appeared on the flanks of the party making the reconnoissance, but they did not attempt to offer any opposition to the operation of the latter, which was most successfully executed.

"At the same time, 1,000 foot soldiers, Highlanders and Zouaves, left Balaklava to the right of our positions, and explored the heights that extended towards the valley of Baidari. They only met a post of Cossacks.

"In fine, I think that on the left bank of the Tchernaya the enemy has only a few soldiers posted to observe our position at a distance. A movement has evidently been produced in the Russian army, the probable cause of which is the debarkation of the Turkish troops still going on at Eupatoria. I shall soon receive positive information on this head.

"Although the number of the sick has slightly increased, in consequence of the constant dampness in which we live, the sanitary state of the army is satisfactory, and the moral spirit of the troops is perfect.

"Although the soldiers have been heavily inconvenienced by the rains, there has yet been no cold weather; the snow, which for a long time past has covered the tops of the mountains in the interior, has not appeared on the hill-plains we occupy, and the thermometer has not once falled below zero. These general conditions are improved by the care we take of our soldiers; and, thanks to the prudent foresight of the Emperor and his Government, the army enjoys a relative degree of comfort that makes it gaily support with a lighter heart its fatigues.

"The number of the sick in our military hospitals at Constantinople amounts to 3794, of whom 1387 are wounded. Out of this total, 266 are Russians. I have established a convalescent depot in the Crimea, near the Bay of Karatch. Here the men who leave the army ambulances, and who only require a little repose, before their return to their duty, will have their recovery promoted. This measure will diminish our draughts to Constantinople.

"H. I. H. Prince Napoleon, still detained at Constantinople by the illness that compelled him to leave the Crimea wished to come and rejoin us. I was bound to oppose this return, which compromised the health of the Prince.

"Accept, &c., The General-in-chief

INDIA.

The prominent event of the fortnight is the commencement of a friendly communication with Dost Mahomed, the ruler of Affghanistan, who holds Cabul, which has often been designated the key of India. To understand the nature and importance of this event, it is necessary to glance for a moment at the progress, not so much of the Russian arms, as of Russian influence, to the West of the Indus. It has often been surmised that the Russians had an intention of marching an army to the banks of the Indus, for the invasion and conquest of India, but the probability of any such movement is exceedingly remote, and of the failure of it there can be no doubt whatever. If 100,000 men were to start from the Russian station nearest to India, it is certain that not more than one-fifth of that number could reach the Indus; and they would not be in a condition to encounter the fresh and well-equipped army of four or five times that number with which we should meet them. The Russians cannot transport their commissariat 1,500 miles where there are no roads. At the same time, it is perfectly palpable that Russia has been gradually working her way down to our frontier, never making a startling move, but steadily advancing her pawns. Her object is to establish her paramount influences throughout the various tribes of Central Asia, to inspire them with awe of her power, and to impress on their minds that the Russians are a far more powerful nation than the English, though they have conquered Hindostan. The Russians are anxious to constitute thomselves the arbiters of Central Asia; and when this preponderating influence has once been thoroughly established, there will be a hundred ways of using it to advantage, which will at once occur to the mind. Not the least annoying result of these advances is of the feverish excitement it creates in India, both in our own territories and among our native allies.

☞ By advices from the city of San Domingo, we learn that on the 6th ult., the congress of the Dominican Republic voted upon the ratification of the Cazneau Treaty with the United States, rejecting it by a large majority. Particulars we have not yet heard, though from another source—and one entitled to implicit confidence, we are informed that, pending the discussion of the Treaty by Congress, a British and two French men-of-war were constantly in the harbor, exercising a very officious influence against the projects of our Government.—Philadelphia Evening Post.

☞ It is stated in the New York Herald, that the Reciprocity Treaty has been sent to England for ratification by the Imperial Government, and that it is expected to be returned to Washington about the first of February. The President's proclamation will be issued immediately after.

FREE COLORED PERSONS IN DELAWARE.—A number of petitions have been presented to the Legislature of Delaware, asking that body to make some amendments to the revised code. The changes desired by the petitioners are, to so alter the law as to allow orderly, industrious and well-behaved free colored persons from other States to come into that State for lawful purposes, on the permit of any Judge or the Chancellor of the State, and to extend the period of absence, whereby free colored persons going beyond the limits of the State are deprived of their residence. —Exchange.

In the winter subsequent to the passage of the Fugitive Slave law, the Legislature of Delaware passed a law prohibiting free colored persons residing in other States from entering that State, under any pretence whatever; the penalty being a fine of $50, or imprisonment. It also deprived persons resident in the State, of their residence, if they absented themselves beyond a certain number of days. As every apparent modification of local laws and customs in favor of colored persons is wont to be regarded by the opposers of emigration as significant of a speedy change of policy towards the colored people, and as the one great aim of their oppressors is to bind the chains still more tightly, never giving even the semblance of a different course, except when their interests are to be promoted, we have no hesitation in concluding, both from the feeling in Delaware, immediately after the passage of the law in question, and from the nature of the proposed changes, that they augur no good. The State of Delaware has but about 2000 slaves within her borders, while the chief city, Wilmington, situated but a few miles from the Pennsylvania line, has a free colored population of about 1200. This increasing colored class—it would have been otherwise had they been slaves—natural enough for Yankee colorophobia, was beginning to be viewed with "disgust" by the white inhabitants of Wilmington, and taking the Fugitive Law as a precedent, for all extirpating designs they might wish to accomplish, they, through their representatives, procured the passage of the above law. But alas for Delaware foresight!—the good people soon found that they had overreached the object intended, and plucked up their own interests.

A religious body of colored persons in Wilmington had for years been in the habit of holding an annual meeting, which drew thither thousands of colored people; on such occasions, steamboats ran extra trips, the cars went freighted down, hotels and boarding houses made provision for the occasion; and with the demand on the baker, the merchant and the clothier, the City of Wilmington was in the course of two or three days made wealthier by about $3000, and the colored people of that and the adjoining States, proportionably poorer. When then, in consequence of some arrests having been made under the new law, within the few months preceding the next meeting, persons were afraid to enter the State, thus cutting off the annual supply of funds complaints against the harshness of the law were universal. We did not contemplate such an enactment as this, said they, we only wished that the colored people should be prohibited from settling down among us. Their visits can do no harm, as we have not a dozen slaves in the whole City, on whom their presence could act injuriously.

The period of absence was also considered short, as it would cause a great deal of inconvenience to gentlemen and ladies, who having colored servants during protracted visits abroad, might wish to retain their services on their return.

Now, viewing the slight alterations petitioned for, we think that the signers will be found among the parties likely to be benefitted by these visitors, for it will be perceived that they are only wanted as such. "To allow orderly, industrious, well behaved persons" coming "for lawful purposes on the permit of any Judge or the Chancellor" to enter would have the desired effect; individuals, unless under some pressing necessity, would rather stay away than subject themselves to the inconvenience of making applications, while a general permit, or in slaveholders phraseology, pass, could at once be obtained on any occasion which might be deemed profitable to any locality.

The colored people of Wilmington have always been noted for industry and sobriety, and their reed-like compliance to all laws, no matter how severe or rigorously enforced, and that character may account for their accumulating property—they have several neat churches, besides much private—and sitting still with lamb-like confidence, while their dearest privileges are being made the stepping stone for artful damagogues, or subservient to the avarice of the community at large.

Sketches of Places and People Abroad.

BY WILLIAM WELLS BROWN.

We are indebted to the Author for a copy of this interesting work. It is written in such a simple style, the scenes are so graphically described, the "places and people" always occupy such a prominent position, while the writer is studiously kept out of sight, except when necessary, that we have been both entertained and instructed in its perusal.

We beg to say, in presenting the claims of this work to the attention of the public, that we do it not on the ground that the author was a slave for the first twenty years of his life, nor yet as an evidence of the capability of colored men, that having been sufficiently demonstrated; but as an evidence of what an untiring industry can in a few years accomplish.

Mr. Brown has been for the last few years in a position favourable to his intellectual progress, and having already marked out his course, he steadily pursued it, until, as one result of his diligence, he has produced this work—the best, in our judgment, that has yet been written by a colored American. As an illustration of the unfaltering perseverance of the author, we here give some of his reflections, which every young person should read and profit by.

"He who escapes from slavery at the age of twenty years, without any education, as did the writer of this, must read when others are asleep, if he would catch up with the rest of the world. "To be wise," says Pope, "is but to know how little can be known." The true searcher after truth and knowledge is always like a child; although gaining strength from year to year, he still "learns to labour and to wait." The field of labor is ever expanding before him, reminding him that he has yet more to learn; teaching him that he is nothing more than a child in knowledge, and inviting him onward with a thousand varied charms. The son may take possession of the father's goods at his death, but he cannot inherit with the property the father's cultivated mind. He may put on the father's old coat, but that is all; the immortal mind of the first wearer has gone to the tomb. Property may be bequeathed, but knowledge cannot. Then let him who would be useful in his day and generation be up and doing. Like the Chinese student who learned preseverance from the woman whom he saw trying to rub a crowbar into a needle, so should we take the experience of the past to lighten our feet through the paths of the future."

☞ A riot occurred on the Buffalo and Brantford Railroad on Saturday last, during which one man was killed, and several wounded. Non-payment of wages said to have been the cause of the difficulty.

☞ The steamer Queen City, owned by Browne, of Hamilton, was burned to the water's edge on Monday evening last, while lying at the Queen's wharf. She was fully insured.

☞ A man named Younger, from Thorald, C. W., was robbed in Rochester, N. Y., on Thursday of last week, of $800.

☞ The trial of Joseph Irving for manslaughter, which came on at the Assizes on the 24th, resulted in his acquittal,—the jury having been out but a few minutes.

The post-office at Hamilton was robbed on Sunday night last, of two cash boxes containing valuable papers and £40. The entrance was effected through a window.

Emigration.

There certainly cannot be any doubts in the mind of any rational thinking man as to the propriety, nay, the absolute necessity of our emigration,—the opinions of Douglass Watkins Gaines and Co. to the contrary notwithstanding. Let any one who may wish to see and understand things as they now exist among us, parade our streets, visit places of low amusement, and about among the poorer classes, who are kept so, not because they are indolent, not at all; but because they are confined to the lowest, meanest, and least profitable drudgeries. Boys without trades, or the possibility of learning them, loiter around the market places and streets, to catch any kind of a job that chance may throw in their way. Was the State bent on breeding criminals for her prisons and penitentiaries, what course could she pursue better calculated to promote her object than placing the young in the situation in which ours are placed. Still it is strange, though true, that notwithstanding all the inviting allurements to vice are open to them, with all of their baneful influences, but a small number, comparatively, incline voluntarily to vicious or dishonest habits. Although the effects may not be felt and seen so visibly in the number of youthful criminals, still it has its effects most disastrously on the building up and keeping together families of worth and respectability. Many of our boys on approaching the verge of manhood, and often before they arrive at that age, feel inclined to rid themselves of the dictation of half bred women, and the society and atmosphere of gentlemen's kitchens and hotel dining rooms, leave and go to sea, after which many, many of whom add but little to the well being of colored society, nor materially to its numbers. This accounts for the much larger proportion of unmarried females in all of our large cities, and is an excuse (for which we men are responsible) for the misfortune of many a young girl who might have been an ornament and a blessing to society. Trace the subject a little further, and it will be found to answer the question recently discussed,—"What becomes of the free colored people?" But let not the anxious enquirer, if he is disposed to use this as argument against "the free colored people," press the question too far, or he may find that it also answers another as equally important; that is—where do half white or mulatto people come from? I think it will be found that one mulatto comes for every black that goes. I would invite the opponents of amalgamation, north and south, as well as the philanthropist and reformer, to the consideration of this subject. If they, the white and colored races are to be separated, if it is not done ere long, to define the dividing line, its intents and meaning, may, I think, give as much trouble as the Missouri compromise line. The conditions upon which this unholy alliance is forced upon us against our will or consent, should be repelled by every Christian, black or white, the former more especially. The causes of these ills, so far as we are concerned, is our dependent and unprotected condition. The remedy is removal, or bear them until time produces the desired change, at the rate we have been progressing in that direction since the adoption of the Missouri compromise line. Unfortunately for us, however, there are men among our own people who boast of their assimilation with their white neighbours, although at the expense of the chastity of our sisters and daughters. In many respects our condition, as has been assumed and may be admitted, is being ameliorated; laws are less stringent, and prejudice, perhaps, not so proscriptive. But boys are no oftener to be found in the great workshops of mechanism, nor behind the counter, nor in the counting-house, than they were twenty years ago; while, at the same time, we have been and are still being ousted from many of the domestic occupations which custom had consigned us to. Still, men say we must stay here and bear it, stay here and help to fight for the slave. Bless your dear soul, my considerate friend, do you not know that a half a dozen black "merchant princes," plying between the city of New York and Canada, clothed with all the rights of the British subject, would be more help to the slave than a whole State full of such defenceless and unprotected menials as we are here. Although the laws may be less severe, still the chances for colored men to acquire property, are also diminishing. We are now suffering in most of the so called free States, the consequences of the policy recommended in the Senate a few years since by that celebrated freesoiler and statesman, Senator Dix, of New York,—that by continued disfranchisement, and the similar marked prejudicial influences, would crush out our spirits and cause us to retrograde, not being able to supply our numbers by reproduction. To all such, our quiet indifference, in regard to removal, is most desirable. I wish our friends could see through it as I now believe I did, when I opposed the free soil policy, for which I was so severely censured.

J. N. S.

Brooklyn, L. I., January, 1855.

From the London Anti-Slavery Advocate, for January.

Speech of Parker Pillsbury at the London A. S. Conference.

Mr. Pillsbury said he could not but regret that the addendum to the resolution proposed by his esteemed friend, Mr. Bishop, had been withdrawn. Nor did he feel quite sure that it should be withdrawn even on the conditions proposed by the Rev. Mr. James of Bristol. Mr. Bishop offered to withdraw the addendum, provided there was nothing on the records of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society dishonorable or derogatory to the character of the American Anti-Slavery Society. My excellent friend, Mr. James, who seconded Mr. Bishop, said he was ready to withdraw his part in the proceedings, if we could have assurance that hereafter all bygones should be bygones, and that henceforth the delegates and representatives of the American Society should always be met and received by the British and Foreign Committee in an honorable and friendly manner; and that society be recognized and co-operated with, as became the only truly vital anti-slavery instrumentality in the United States. Now, both these gentlemen appear to have been satisfied with the assurance given. I was not. To be be sure, the secretary said most emphatically, that no record did exist on the society's book to which Mr. Bishop could object. But then, Mr. Forster, one of the most prominent of the executive committee, tells us that he has his doubts, at least his fears, whether the secretary is right. And as to the pledge given to Mr. James, I can only say, that I have at least this apprehension of its insincerity. It was only yesterday evening, that one of the most distinguished members of the British and Foreign Society—one of the most prominent of its executive—told a friend of mine, that "no consideration whatever could induce him to recognize the American Anti-Slavery Society;" and my friend assured me he was honest in so speaking. Where now is my security, that hereafter we are to have any change in the relations or feelings that shall subsist between the American Society and that which has called this Conference? I was invited here as to a meeting that was to harmonise all past differences, and unite all classes of honest and true abolitionists on both sides the water. And what are the conditions of that union to be? Sir, the British and Foreign Society for a course of years, either ignored the American Society almost wholly, or else sought only to blast and blacken its character, by false and foul charges of infidelity, and other groundless impeachments. They paid their secretary, John Scoble, thousands of pounds to do such a work. (Mr. Pillsbury was here interrupted by some one, who denied that John Scoble was paid for any such thing.) Mr. Pillsbury resumed. He said, Scoble did the foul work, and was paid by his employers, and without any remonstrance. And besides, members of the society, and even of the executive committee, had often given us in America but too good evidence, that no part of the work of their secretary was more fully approved. Not content with maligning us here at home, Scoble even crossed the Atlantic, and joining himself with our most inveterate foes, he pursued his avocation there. My friend, George Thompson, had just been with us, and the country was still shaking beneath his mighty tread, from Canada to California. And he, too, was assailed with more malignity than should have pursued a felon. The British and Foreign Secretary sought to blast and blacken our society for being what it was not; and George Thompson for being its chosen champion and advocate. And now at a meeting called to unite all hearts and hands everywhere, in the work of human emancipation, the society, and committee, whose secretary did all this evil, are not willing to speak even the name of those who have been thus long and thus greatly wronged; are not willing to speak so much as its name in one of the resolutions. Sir, said Mr. Pillsbury, it seems to me a small favor to ask, after all that has been suffered by that little band of devoted men and women in the United States, from every kind of foe, and from the additional battery opened upon them in this country by the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Committee—it seems to me a very small favor to ask that they be now taken by the hand, and honorably introduced to the friends of humanity in the British realm. But that small token of friendly recognition and regard, Mr. Pillsbury said, is denied us. We were thus honorably noticed and printed in one of the resolutions, but we were stricken out. Then a friendly voice is heard, most respectfully asking that we be thus recognised. Another voice is heard seconding the proposal, and most forcibly and elogently urging its propriety. But it is all to no purpose; and so that little host, of most of whom a far better world than this would not be worthy, must still be un-named in meetings called and controlled by the British and Foreign A. S. Society; and thus, so far as that society has power, kept unknown to the world. But this is the union, the fraternization, to which we are invited! (Mr. Pillsbury was here interrupted by Joseph Sturge, who begged that he would come to the subject of the American churches, and tell us what we can do to help to abolish slavery.) Mr. Pillsbury said, having now spoken his convictions on the question which was just before the meeting, he was prepared to do so. And first, he said, you cannot help us politically, because we cannot help ourselves politically. Slavery being a State institution, Congress has no more power to abolish it in the separate States, than has your Parliament. And, then, by the terms of the constitution, each state can have two senators in Congress, and no more. No matter whether the population be sixty thousand or sixty times that number. And ever since 1820, when the first political contest with slavery was had, the slave power has continued to keep the number of slave states just about equal to those of the free. And then, as the slaveholders ever act unitedly on all questions touching their favorite institution, nothing can defeat them. They are victorious in every battle; whether it be the annexation of Texas, the conquest of New Mexico and California, the enactment of the Fugitive Slave Law, or the passage of the Nebraska Bill, by the votes they have, and those they can always buy or bully from the North, they are ever and always successful. And, as only with the consent of three-fourths of all the legal voters in the nation, can the constitution be changed, the true abolitionists are not wasting their energies in any political struggles or undertakings. But, said Mr. Pillsbury, I will come to the churches, as my friend Sturge desired, if he will permit me to call him friend, and I will begin with that to which he himself belongs. The Friends or Quakers here, I find, are occasionally sending deputations and delegations to various bodies, and sometimes governments, remonstrating against some crime or wrong, with which the parties addressed may be chargeable. I have heard it many times hinted, that the Friends, like other folk, love good company, and so often appear in the presence of the ruling potentates with their protests and remonstrances. This all may be very well, but I wish to assure them that when they sent their deputation to the President and governors of the United States, they sent to the very worst company to be found there. And surely to the least influential. It has come to that now, that none but the mean and time-serving, such as are willing to bend lowest to the behests of slavery, and to creep in the very dust to the places of power, can be elected to office. One might think the curse pronounced upon the serpent in Eden had been entailed upon every president and governor of the United States. And yet it was to these men you sent your deputation. Why did you not rather send them to those recreant overseers and leaders of Quaker meetings, who, in every State in the Union, vote such men into office? Henry Clay was a duellist and a gambler, as well as slaveholder. He was engaged in three duels; and had sixty slaves. Everybody knew it, nobody denied it; and yet, though thus bloody with duelling, and black with the crime of slaveholding, the Indiana Yearly Meeting, the largest by far in the world—its own member boasted to me,—invited him to the high seat, and that on First-day, when all the gathered thousands there were assembled for special worship. This did that meeting, when they knew he was travelling for electioneering purposes, and had only come there prowling after votes, like a wild beast for prey. And, worst of all, large numbers of that meeting gave him their votes. So many, that a small portion of the body, too honest and conscientious to support such proceedings, after trying every form of remonstrance, at last drew off and formed another yearly meeting, that is still in active existence. It has an existence; it holds fast the testimony of the early Friends on every point of doctrine; and it only heeded the advice of the London yearly meeting in its action against slavery. But, strange to tell, your deputation last year did not attend their little yearly meeting, to cheer and encourage it in the way of well-doing, although it was but eight miles off; but they chose to keep with the supporters of Henry Clay. Most of our presidential candidates, for the last twenty years, have been distinguished for one of two characteristics. Large slaveholding, or successful killing of Indians or Mexicans, and almost always in wars set on foot by slaveholders, and only for their unhallowed purposes. And yet very large numbers of leading and influential Friends, with all their peace and anti-slavery professions, have voted for these men as readily as though they had been the very saints of light. I asked an overseer of one of the largest Friends' meetings in Massachusetts, Mr. Pillsbury continued, for the use of his meeting-house, for a lecture against slavery. He denied me very promptly, and gave me as one particular reason, that we had "singing" in our meetings! I told him that was true; but that if he wished, we would forego it for that time, though Jenny Lind herself should volunteer her voice. Still he denied me; but I have seen that same man at whig-gatherings, where the doggerel that was screeched by lungs scarred by the flaming fire of the distillery, would suit any drunken orgies ever held in your city. And the candidate whom he thus supported, and for whom he thus voted, was distinguished for nothing under heaven but his success in butchering the poor Indians, and for his devotion to slavery. Mr. Pillsbury dwelt much longer on such derelictions as these among American Friends; and finally said he hoped these British deputations might continue to be sent, though to the heads of such yearly and monthly meetings of Quakers, rather than to the heads of the government, whom those overseers and leading members so often helped to elect into office. Of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Mr. Pillsbury said: It is probably one of the strongest ecclesiastical bodies in the world, looking at its numbers, its wealth, its pretended piety, its means and modes of operations, and at the instrumentalities which it has already in existence. I think I shall do the American churches generally no injustice by taking that body as their representative. Let me observe however, that there are some minor associations which except to its course, and would not be willing to regard it, on the question of slavery, as a Christian body. You have had many men in your country representing the religion of America, who, while here, have taken much pains to describe the Garrison movement as an infidel movement; yet these very men were at the time connected with the American Board of missions, who, year after year, have had the question of slavery pressed upon them by the Abolitionists, but without effect. Why, some of the Board's own missionaries have been slaveholders. Take one example: for years, John Layton Wilson was an eminent and popular missionary of that Board in Africa, though all the time he was the owner of a plantation of negro slaves in South Carolina. At home, on his plantation, he was manufacturing heathens; for, by the laws of the State, the teaching of slaves is punishable with the severest penalties short of death. Yet this man, holding slaves under these circumstances, went to Africa, and there undertook to convert the sable sons and daughters of that country to Christ leaving his own slaves in darkness and paganism. We labored for years before we could get the Board to admit this fact, and the first time the admission was made, was in the columns of the Connecticut Observer, the organ of congregationalism in that State, which announced that the American Board, in the case of Mr. Wilson, 'had certainly not acted with its usual prudence.' Such was their mild and gingerly mode of getting out of the difficulty. We have been branded as false accusers for stating that they had a slaveholder in their employ, and when they were at last compelled to own the fact, they did so in the mildest terms, by saying that the Board had not acted with the prudence which usually characterised its proceedings. The fact is notorious that that great association is a slaveholding body, and that its treasury is constantly replenished by the price of the bodies and souls of men, bought and sold like beasts in the market; and it is equally true that its missions to Africa, to convert the heathen of that continent, are sustained by the money raised from the sale of Africa's daughters, sold in the American shambles to grace the seraglios of Southern debauchees. [Great sensation.] Oh! Mr. Chairman, what language can describe the soul-revolting wickedness of an association, calling itself Christian, that can take God's poor and helpless children, and sell them in the market like cattle, then send their price to convert their relations under the palm trees of Africa! Oh, sir, the crucifiers of the Son of God would have shrunk from such an outrage! They could buy God's immaculate Son of the betraying Judas; they could crucify him when the sun in the heavens refused to behold the spectacle; when the earth trembled and shuddered with horror at the transaction; when the graves could not hold their iron bars, but dead saints must leap to light and life to render more awful still the tragic scene; they could crucify the Son of God amidst sights and circumstances like these, but there was one thing they could not do—they could not put the price of his betrayal into the treasury of the Lord. [Great cheering.] It was reserved for an American Board of Missions to the heathen to improve upon the deep depravity and crimson guilt of the murderers of God's incarnate Son. (Sensation.)

Alderman HARRISON, of Wakefield, expressed a hope that the speaker would confine himself to the practical business of the conference.

DUNCAN M'LAREN, Esq., the chairman said: A great deal of what Mr. Pillsbury is saying is well worthy of our attention, but we have before us a most important resolution affirming great principles, and the value of that resolution will be much enhanced by its passing unanimously. I would advise the speaker to keep to the resolution.

The Rev. JAMES SHERMAN: Allow me, sir, as the mover of the resolution, to say a word upon the point of order. The resolution before us relates to American slavery, and the relation thereto of the American religious bodies. [Hear, hear.] Our excellent friend is giving us most important information respecting the actual relation of those religious bodies to the institution of slavery, and I sincerely hope that, whatever may be our feelings while listening to him—however our souls may be harrowed by his statements, the meeting will allow Mr. Pillsbury to give us all the facts of the case, and impress our minds fully with the awful condition in which the religious bodies on the other side of the Atlantic stand in connexion with slavery. [Cheers.]

Mr. PILLSBURY: The meeting will forgive me, if I have fallen into a wrong course of remark, when I tell them that I was informed by one who I supposed had the principal direction of the business of the Conference, that the state of the religious bodies of America on the subject of slavery was the special subject upon which I was expected to speak. If it be not, I really do not know what I am to do. [Loud cries of 'Go on.'] To return, then, to the American Board. I wish to correct a misapprehension which prevails in this country. Here it is supposed that that Board is a Christian body, but it is not so, in any proper sense of the term, and it should not be so called. It is a Mahometan Board rather than a Christian. I beg pardon of the Sultan. I bethink me, that, were I to-day a slave to the Sultan, and were I to embrace the Moslem faith, I should at once go out free; but were I a slave to the President of the American Board, I might become the most eminent saint the world has seen since the great Apostles of the Gentiles, and my sanctity would only enhance my price in the slave market; for a Christian slave sells for more dollars than any other. [Hear, hear.] When we, American abolitionists, had pressed the American Board until they admitted the fact of slaveholding amongst them, we next attacked them for allowing polygamists to belong to their mission churches, and we found them as obstinate on this point as on that of slavery. At their anniversary, in 1847, they spent many days discussing the question whether polygamists should be admitted into their mission churches, and their decision was that the question should be left to the missionaries themselves, and that the Board should take no further action on the subject. The missionaries settled the point by admitting polygamists in at least four instances. Now, with this indisputable fact before me, I venture to assert that this body has no more title to the name of Christian—looking at the way in which it has treated the sacred institution of marriage—than it has when looking at its conduct in relation to the rights of man and the institution of Slavery.

The Rev. CUTHBERT YOUNG, of Newcastle-on-Tyne: I have reason to know that that is a misapprehension. Mr. Pillsbury is stating that which is not true. [Oh, oh.] I do not impute wilful misrepresentation, but I can show from the recent proceedings at Hartford, in Connecticut, that the Board does not deserve the description given of it. I would refer also to a document written by one of the secretaries of the Board. I am sorry I have not the document in my pocket at this moment. [Order, order.] Our friend's statements are very highly colored, and I have reason to know that some of them are not at all in accordance with the facts of the case; what he has said about polygamy is one

The Rev. SAMUEL R. WARD, of Canada, rose and said, that, for twenty years, he had been a witness of the battles which had been fought with the American Board upon the matters referred to, and that nothing in American history was more conclusively established or more abundantly authenticated than the facts which had been stated by Mr. Pillsbury. He would tell his friend, Mr. Young that this question had been again and again discussed when he (Mr. Young) was within the walls of his Alma Mater. [Cheers.]

Mr. PILLSBURY: In what I have said, I have but one object, namely, to make you acquainted with the true characters of those with whom your churches are in religious fellowship, and I now leave you to determine whether such bodies as I have spoken of deserve to be called Christians. You have hitherto treated them as Christians, you have welcomed their delegations: these delegations have had free access to your pulpits, they have sat at your sacramental boards, and you have in all respects treated them as Christian brethren. You have done this while some of these men had no coats on their backs but stolen coats, and while the jewels which sparkled in their bosoms and on their fingers were nothing but the crystilised tears of mothers, whose babes had been sold in the market to furnish the means of sending these delegates to the churches of Britain. [Cheers.] My purpose in speaking of the American Board, and their connexion with slavery and polygamy, has been to make plain to you in England, what is as plain to us in America as the sun in the heavens, that there are so called religious bodies amongst us, in communion and fellowship with you, who, judged by their principles and practice, are wholly undeserving the name of Christian. When you ask what can you do, I answer, treat the delegates from these bodies as they ought to be treated. You did so in one instance. When the Rev. Dr. Pryne was rejected by the British and Foreign Bible Society, because he was the apologist of slavery and the maligner of Mrs. Stowe, it was one of the grandest testimonies ever borne against slavery and in behalf of the Anti-Slavery cause; and if your churches had but followed the example of O'Connell, and refused to shake hands with slaveholders and their apologists, by this time slavery would have fallen, and its history would have been written to grace or blacken the shelves of the historian. [Cheers.] And last, but not least, continued Mr. Pilsbury: nay, greatest and more than all, encourage the full, free action of woman. Let me assure you, Mr. Chairman, that the protest which emanated from Stafford House, and was signed by so many thousands of the women of Britain, that single document moved our nation more deeply than all the state papers your whole line of monarch have graced with the royal seal, since the reign of George III. On! that such protests could come thundering over the ocean, with every eastern storm! And I am glad to find that 'British usage' no longer lords it over women in conventions, as in 1840. Then such pure and consecrated spirits as Lucretia Mott were voted outside, or in, o the gallery on account of their sex. To-day woman stands by our side, delegated to represent by far the most important part of the movement of this country, so far as America is concerned. For she represents that which gives us 'the sinews of war,' in contributions to the Boston Bazar. Yes, sir, woman stands here to-day, not by tolerance but by right—not by sufferance but as an equal; equal every way but in works, in sympathy, in consecration every way our superior. Snaming our commercial calculations by her arithmetic of the conscience, and baffling all our cotton-growing calculations, by her interest and dividend tables, reckoned from the quick throbbings of warm and tender hearts. Never, for the love of God, let the scenes of 1840 be witnessed more. Safer far were it, that man should be motionless, if either must, when woman lifts her hand. Better that man be dumb, when she utters her voice. But so it should not be. All may, must act together in this great work of humanity. It will require us all. Let us then stand together in the strife, that hereafter our united anthem of triumph [for God will give us the victory] may swell away to heaven, like the voice of many waters, like the song of the morning stars.

This is a necessarily imperfect sketch of an eloquent and touching speech, which took more than an hour in the delivery, was frequently interrupted by hearty cheers, and appeared to make a strong impression upon the Conference.

The Southern View.

The editor of the Jackson (Miss.) Central Democrat reasons himself into the belief that Slavery will ultimately be introduced into California. The Legislature, he says, passed a law, soon after the organization of the State, allowing twelve months for the conveyance out of the State of slaves carried there before the adoption of the Constitution; and, no arrangements having been made for taking them out, in that time, the law was extended at the last session. Of course, he says, Slavery has existed in the new State, permanently, ever since it was settled. And now, he says, there is a great change in the public sentiment. Men of capital, who are springing up there, know how profitable the labor of slaves can be used in mining.

"They know how rapidly fortunes can be accumulated by the possession of slaves as a portion of their capital, and the immense advantage they will possess over those who employ white laborers, in consequence of the exorbitant price of the latter, and from these considerations will seek the possession of the whole machinery, as well as the area, for working the precious metals. There is no doubt but capitalists in California are now taking this view of the matter, and, by a combination of capital power, the object is easy of accomplishment. It is a known fact that a strong and healthy negro man can earn from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per annum, by working in the mines; and will not this fact, within itself, be a sufficient cause for negroes to be sent there, if only for one or two years? Negroes are now being sent daily from Virginia, North and South Carolina, and in a great many instances even from Alabama and Mississippi, where slavery is much more profitable than in the former mentioned States. A negro population is bound to concentrate there, and the combined efforts of the Abolitionists cannot prevent it."

We call the attention of the people to the positive statement of this writer, that "negroes are being sent daily from Virginia, North and South Carolina, and in a great many instances even from Alabama and Mississippi," to California.

Thus, while the Slavery Extensionists are carrying on their operations everywhere, the good people of the North are meditating how most effectually to discourage Immigration, thereby reducing their political power, already so divided as to be no match for slavery.—National Era.

A Negro Execution in Virginia.

Yesterday, between 11 and 12 o'clock, negro Washington, the slave of Mr. Thomas O. Burton, was put to death on the gallows, in a ravine, a short distance northeast of the Poor House, precisely on the spot where the two pirates, Clements and Reed, paid the penalty of their crimes about two years since. Negro Washington, a few weeks ago, was found guilty, by the County Court of Henrico, of setting fire to the barn of Benjamin W. Green, six miles west of this city; and for this crime he was executed. He was taken to the gallows in a furniture waggon, and after a conversation of about fifteen minutes with Mr. Hutchinson, Sheriff of Henrico county, the rope was attached to the crossbeam, the waggon moved off, and the wretched creature was launched from time into eternity.

No clergy attended his last moments, and the solemn affair was attended with but little ceremony. He went to the gallows in a laborer's dress, of shirt, pantaloons and an old sharp-crowned white hat; and with these clothes with the addition of a white handkerchief over his eyes, he was hanged. To the very last moment he persisted in declaring his innocence of the crime for which his life was to be taken. Five or six hundred persons, chiefly negroes, were present to witness the execution. The smallness of the gathering we regard as an evidence that executions have lost their novelty in this city.

The criminal was a young and stout man of gingerbread complexion, and strongly marked with negro features, having a large mouth, thick lips, and a physiognomy indicative of great stupidity. It was evident, from his looks and demeanor at the gallows, that he had not sufficient mind to comprehend and realize his awful situation. From the first to the last, he exhibited not the slightest sensibility, but yielded to the awful penalty with as much coolness as if assigned an ordinary duty of every day life.—Richmond Enquirer.

Slaves Liberated—A Family United—Story of two Kidnapped Boys.

A deeply interesting re-union of a severed family took place at the house of Mr. Levi Coffin on last Saturday. The story, as told us by the parties, runs in this wise: Forty-eight years ago two little colored boys, named Peter and Levin Still, were playing in the higway near their father's house, on the Delaware river, when a stranger passing by in a gig asked them to take a ride. The boys did so, and were thus kidnapped and carried to Lexington, Ky., where they were sold to one John Fisher. They were ultimately sold to other masters, and after 13 years' slavery in Kentucky, were sent south, where they were purchased by John Hogan, of Franklin county, South Alabama. At the age of twenty-four, Levin died, but Peter continued a slave for thirty-one years. During this period he married a female slave belonging to one Barnard McKinon, a neighbor of his master, and had three children, two sons and a daughter. By years of extreme economy, Peter at last saved five hundred dollars. This was enough to purchase his freedom, and a worthy Jewish gentleman, acting for Peter, paid the money.

Peter bade farewell to his family and went North, to Philadelphia, to discover, if possible, his relatives. By a series of extraordinary providences he found his aged mother and eight brothers and sisters still living. He laboured for some time to save enough to buy the freedom of his family, but as his accumulations were slow and the amount to be raised very large—$5,000—he at last determined to appeal to the charitable public for aid. He went from place to place, telling his story and asking assistance. In the mean time, his family ran away from their master. Travelling at night and lying by in the day time, they escaped from the slave states and to Indiana, where, however, they were captured by a white man named Anderson, who resides near Vincennes, and who returned them to their master. The abolitionists of Indiana made an effort to get them off, but did not succeed.

Upon being taken back, they grew hopeless of ever getting free. At last, after four years effort, Peter had raised five thousand dollars, and a few weeks ago an agent was despatched to Alabama. He purchased the wife and children, and brought them on to this city, to which Peter had come from Philadelphia to meet them. The re-union was deeply affecting. One of the sons is twenty-seven and the other twenty-four years of age.

One of them had a wife in Alabama, who died, leaving a baby only four months old. When coming away, the father begged hard for his little one, but it was worth $200. He had nothing, and came away without it.

If these are fair samples, Southern slaves have not been so much degraded and brutalized, as somtimes represented. These colored men say that when they were taken back from Indiana, they used to be sent for to make private revelations to slaves, who resided as far as twenty miles distant, and who wished to know something of the route north, and the people of the free states.

Peter expects, when he reaches Philadelphia, to publish a card of thanks to those who have aided him. He and his family will leave this morning.

Arrival of the "Pacific."

NEWS IMPORTANT!!

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.

The Pacific left Liverpool on the evening of the 13th instant, and reached her dock about half-past nine this morning. She was off Sandy Hook about five o'clock yesterday evening, but laid off on account of the snow storm. She brings sixty-two passengers.

News very important.

The Eastern Question has assumed an entirely new aspect, and a most important one, the Czar having not only accepted the four points of guarantee, but also the interpretation as explained by England, France and Austria, but no armistice is granted, consequently hostilities go on without abatement.

The conduct of Prussia and the German States is still equivocal.

The sincerity of Russia was much doubted in England.

The Allies, it is said, will insist on the Russian naval power in the Black Sea being placed on a level with that of other Powers, as a proof of their success; and on this point it is expected negociations will split, as Russia will on no account assent to this.

It is not yet fully known whether Russia has accepted the four points unconditionally, or with explanations.

This phase of affairs has caused a rise in consols of 2 per cent., but they had fallen off again.

Sardinia had joined the Western alliance.

Prussia claims to take part in the negociations, but declines at present to increase her army.

Omar Pacha had gone to the Crimea.

The Russians are reported to have again invaded the Principalities.

A despatch, dated Brailow, January 9th, says:—"The Russians have crossed the Danube, invaded the Dobrudscha, and captured Tultscha. Said Pasha defended Tultscha as long as it was tenable."

Prussia had answered Austria's demands for the mobilization of the Russian army, by refusing to do so at present.

The siege of Sebastopol continued without change to the 2nd, although repeated rumors of its capture had been circulated.

A terrible inundation had occurred at Hamburg.

The Pacific ran into and sunk the brig Corinthian in the river Mersey, valued at £30,000.

The ship George Canning had been lost, and with her, it is supposed 110 passengers.

PARIS, Saturday 1st.

A courier, arrived from Bucharest, confirms the report of the recommencement of hostilities. The Russians crossed in force above the Tultsch, defeated the Turks under Said Pacha, took the town, and were marching on the Katcha. No interference on the part of the Austrians. This statement caused some consternation.

Various rumors were afloat regarding changes in the Cabinet, but they are regarded only as rumours.

On the 12th the Liverpool and American Chambers of Commerce presented an address to Lord Elgin, for the part he had taken in negociating the Reciprocity Treaty. Lord Elgin made a neat and appropriate speech on the occasion.

The proposed mediation of the United States had not excited much attention.

The London Times treats the subject with candor and fairness, and submits that the United States must allow that such offer of mediation may be declined in any special case, and no disrespect implied by the declination. It is free to one party to offer its friendly services, but equally free to the other not to accept them.

Patriotic Fund.

Mr. A. M. Ross, Chief Engineer of the Grand Trunk Railway, who leaves Montreal for Europe to-day, has sent a subscription of £20 to the Committee of the above fund. Mr. L. H. Holton, one of the members for Montreal, has handed the Chairman of the Committee a cheque for £10. Lady Lafontaine sold 50 tickets for the concert; Mrs. Dunn 28; Mrs. Holton, 48; Mrs. Greenshields 50; Mrs. Moffatt 50; Mrs. S. Benjamin 68; and Mrs. Fulford 60; and the other returns, as they are sent in, will show how much individual exertion has been used. The Banks were represented at the concert on Thursday, from the respective Presidents down to the messengers The Post Office, Custom House, and all the public departments furnished their quotas. The Military were represented by the Commander-in-Chief's Staff, and the heads of Military Departments, the Officers of the Canadian Rifles, and the entire squadron of Montreal Cavalry. The Mayor and corporation, the members for the City, and every interest and class in Montreal sent members to the Concert. The adjacent Townships furnished large numbers of people and still larger numbers of tickets were sold to those who felt sympathy for the object, but were unable to attend. The Speaker of the House of Assembly sent a cheque for £12,10s, and expressed his regret at a prior engagement at St. Hyacinthe, and finally Lord Bury wrote to request that ten tickets might be reserved for Lady Head and the Governor General's party; and if the state of the river had permitted, the attendance from Quebec would have been large. British and Canadian alike vied with each other in Lower Canada, in their efforts and sympathies for the object. We are not able to state the amount which will be obtained for the Fund, until the returns are all made. As the monies come in they are paid into the Bank of Montreal, to the credit of the Patriotic Fund, and the subscription book will be kept open for a few days longer, to enable those who have not subscribed through other means to do so, if they have the ability and the inclination. The Committee of the Fund will be thankful for communication from those who contemplate subscribing, so that they may be enabled to close the account, and report at the earliest possible period.—Montreal Pilot.

CLOSING LIQUOR SHOPS.—In accordance with Mayor Wood's warning to the liquor dealers, that he should revoke the licenses of all who persisted in keeping their stores open on Sunday, the various small drinking shops were very generally closed yesterday. The consequence was that scarcely a drunken man was visible last evening. Only the small groggeries and corner groceries come under the ban, however, for we saw about as many "first class" dram shops open in Broadway and other public localities as usual. The three cent dealers complain loudly of this partiality shown by the Mayor for the sixpenny houses. They do not think it fair play. We have better accounts from Brooklyn. Our repoter says it was a model Sunday over there. In order to ascertain to what extent liquor places were kept open, Mayor Hall, accompanied by Chief of Police, Folk, visited the eastern district, (late Williamsburg) and found them all closed with one exception. This, the Union Hotel, in Grandstreet, they entered, and being unknown to the proprietor, witnessed the sale of liquor to five persons. Mayor Hall then made himself known, and, notwithstanding the place was closed at once and leniency asked, the proprietor was informed that he would be dealt with according to law. No drunken men were observed in the street.—N. Y. Express, Monday.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Common Council of the City of the Toronto:

MONDAY, January 22, 1855.

1st. Resolved,—That this Council, sympathising deeply with the Widows and Orphans of the brave men of our Army and Navy, who have fallen in the present war with Russia, desire to appropriate, with the consent of the rate-payers, the sum of £1000, currency, in aid of the Patriotic Fund now being raised, throughout the British Dominions, under the Royal Commission.

2nd. Resolved,—That in order to ascertain whether the wishes of the rate-payers are in accordance with those of this Council on this subject, a Poll be opened in each of the wards of this city, on Thursday, 1st day February next,

AT TEN O'CLOCK, A. M.,

And continue open until 4 p. m., of the same day; and that the Electors be required to vote yea or nay, for or against the said appropriation, in a Book to be provided for that purpose for each Ward, and that the officers appointed to take such vote, return the Books with the result thereof, to the Clerk of the Council, so as to be laid on the Table on Monday, the 5th day of February next.

Resolved,—That the vote under the foregoing resolutions be taken at the same polling places, and by the same Returning Officers as at the last Municipal election for this city.

Notice is therefore hereby given, that a Poll of the Electors of the city in the respective Wards, will be held as above resolved, on the day appointed, of which all electors are required to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

A DELECTABLE AND ROSEATE COMPOUND IS

ATKINSON'S

UNRIVALLED PARISIAN

TOOTH PASTE,

A UNIQUE PREPARATION,

Quickly Cleansing the TEETH, arresting decay, producing a delightful odor to the Breath, and ruby color to the Gums and Lips,

WITHOUT ACID,

OR OTHER HURTFUL INGREDIENTS TO THE

Enamel or outer Covering of the Teeth.

ITS celebrity in the fashionable circles of Paris and London, and the continual recommendations of eminent Dentists, and those who have been using it for years, establish its superiority over all dentrifices in use, while its miraculous effects upon the Teeth and Gums, even where there has been considerable neglect, proves it merits all the eulogium bestowed upon it.

FORGERY.

The Counterfeit Radway's Ready Relief in Canada.

THE LIVES OF THE PEOPLE IN DANGER.

THE public are cautioned against purchasing a counterfeit of Radway's Ready Relief, which is now circulating through the Canadas.—We are informed that parties at Hamilton, C.W. have been selling a spurious article of our Ready Relief, for the genuine to dealers. This is not only a fraud upon us, but is a most wicked imposition on the public. The wretch that will knowingly lend himself to so vile and treacherous a trick, for the gain of a few extra sixpences, is unsafe to deal with, and should be shunned by all respectable dealers, for if a few sixpences will induce him to rob the distressed sufferer of hope and

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16*TH VIC. CAP.* 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermicelli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,

F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty, imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be constructed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. · Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

JOHN E. FORCE,
Publisher and Proprietor.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and to organize on the grounds of the complexional characters of each, a rival of the latter, we pledge ourselves, each as a citizen of our power, in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens. 1st. To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a love of right among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or Presses, in Canada and in the United States, which will have the will and power to notify Her subjects of the country of such attempted imputations, reflections and disparagements in the United States and this country, who may be desirous of emigrating, or emigrants, formerly hereof, and to counteract the efforts of certain agents who may visit the shores of Canada, for the purpose of inducing the ignorant and unwary to believe that Canada is the "good paradise" for the latter, as the highest ambition, or the greatest possible object to be realized, either by coming to or to look upon in the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby propagating the monstrous doctrine that God's children of different complexions cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, be one of hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. currency.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.
By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.
By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.
By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.
By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the a sciating and powerful pen of the Post's own x clusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a

DEVOTED TO ANTI-SLAVERY, TEMPERANCE, AND GENERAL LITERATURE.

"Self-Reliance is the True Road to Independence."

VOLUME I. } TORONTO, CANADA WEST, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1855. { NUMBER 47.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
PROVINCIAL FREEMAN,

The Provincial Freeman will be devoted to Anti-Slavery, Temperance and General Literature. The organ of no particular Political Party, it will open its columns to the views of men of different political opinions, reserving the right, as an Independent Journal, of full expression on all questions or projects affecting the people in a political way; and reserving, also, the right to express emphatic condemnation of all projects, having for their object in a great or remote degree, the subversion of the principles of the British Constitution, or of British rule in the Provinces.

Not committed to the views of any religious sect exclusively, it will carefully observe the rights of every sect, at the same time that a reservation shall be made in favor of an existing difference of opinion, as to the views or actions of the sects respectively.

As an advertising medium, as a vehicle of information on Agriculture,—and as an enemy to vice in any and every conceivable form and a promoter of good morals, it shall be made worthy of the patronage of the public.

From the Liberator

THE ANGEL OF TRUTH.

There's a white-winged Angel who walketh the earth
A dweller 'mong men, though her birth-place is heaven,
By the Father commissioned in mercy and love;
This holy Evangel to us hath he given.

Every earth-child she visits her mission to tell,
And seeketh a hearth-home wherein she may dwell;
And where her white pinions are folded to rest,
There mortal hath welcomed a heavenly guest.

Her teachings, though earnest, are noble and pure,
And the soul that receives them grows strong to endure;
And with faith still unshaken walks trustingly on,
Nor shrinks from the contest till victory's won.

Dark Error beholds her in dread and dismay,
And from her bright presence in fear shrinks away;
While Wrong, darkly frowning, still striveth in vain
To rebind the strong links of his time-rusted chain.

With the Martyrs of old-time she walked 'mid the gloom,
And her presence illumined their path to the tomb;
By the rack and the fagot still hovering near,
In the dark home of trial, the true heart to cheer.

And he, the blest Teacher, the Nazarene mild,
Who dwelt once on earth, by its sins undefiled,
Walking ever beside him, this spirit of light
Led his footsteps unfaltering up Calvary's height.

(And they who would follow the path which he trod,
Must still bear the cross, and must bow 'neath the rod;
But if, like their Master, still faithful they're found,
For the cross he will give them the Seraphim's crown.)

We call this pure spirit the Angel of Truth:
It cheereth the aged, and gudeth the youth;
Oh, then in our hearts and our homes let it dwell—
May we heed its blest teachings, and follow them well!

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

THE PLOT.

The sun had long since sunk in the Indian Ocean, and the night had set in gloomy and dark. The negro had left off his long day's hard labor, to crouch for a few hours on his straw mat, the only article of furniture in his mud hut. On the sugar-estates a dead silence reigned, and the harsh voice of the terrible overseer was no longer heard: the cock had given his first nocturnal crow—the signal of repose—and but for the piercing cry of the tec-tec, or night-lark, as it hopped from sprig to spray, not a sound could now be heard.

At this hour one evening in the year 1833, four individuals, barely clad, might have been seen issuing from the buildings of the same plantation. They trod lightly, directing their steps, each by a different path, across a vast sugar-cane field, which extended like a green carpet to the foot of the Salazes, the highest chain of mountains in the island of Bourbon.

With the exception of one, who had been born in the colony, all these men were natives of the large island of Madagascar, from which they had been carried off by the slave-traders, to be sold to the whites. One belonged to the Ovas or Amboilama, a cross-breed between the Arabs and whites: the second belonged to the tribe of the Antacimæ; a race possessing the characteristics of the Tahitians, but which had been overcome and subjugated, like the majority of the Malagassy nations, by the Amboilama, whose chief was the celebrated Radama. The third was of the Sacalave tribe, descending from the Capres and the Arabs, whom the Ovas had never been able to subdue, notwithstanding the long and sanguinary wars in which they had plunged. But misery and servitude under the same master had not only made them equal, but united them in the bonds of friendship, and bound them to aid one another in shaking off their common yoke.

They went on for an hour, treading like the ostrich, and stopping short every now and then to listen for sounds, and, in order to avoid meeting any one, selecting the most secluded paths. At length they reached, almost at the same time, a thick hedge of aloes and brushwood, thorn and prickly pear, such as are usually to be found planted to mark the confines of colonial estates. It was a fearful and a dangerous barrier to pass through, and required more than temerity to attempt it. Nevertheless, they accomplished it, by creeping through the least bushy parts: but they did not succeed without leaving behind, on the strong thorns, a portion of their thin garments, and even some of their flesh. Having got through, they found themselves in one of those plains, in colonial parlance called a savannah, in the midst of which rose like a black spectre, an enormous tamarind tree, that might have been taken for the genius of the place. It overlooked the whole plain, its enormous branches extending around and bending downwards, forming a huge cone, and in the day-time offering a shelter impenetrable to the sun. It was a retreat well known to the negro, who, often a wanderer on the plain, and overcome by heat and fatigue, sought its friendly shade, and blessed it as though it were a deity. The four slaves reached this spot in succession. They could not be seen themselves, but from it they could descern every thing. They grouped themselves against the huge trunk, each taking up his position as he arrived, but not saying a word to break the dead silence.

The Sacalave was the first to speak:

"Yes," said he, as though pursuing the thread of a previous conversation, instead of commencing one: "yes, brothers, we have been slaves long enough."

"Long enough," echoed the others.

"A'ter all," resumed the other, with warmth, "what we got to care for 'bout dyin'? What's death? Why need we be 'feard on him? What we got in this world? We got any joy? any rest? any happiness? Dese all a mockery to us. Hard work; al'ays at it, and al'ays for de ole boss: cow-hidin's, misery, never-ending slavery, dat's our lot: and, brothers, I say, be dese things to make we hang to life? I cusses it: yes, I does, for I'se like the furnace dat's burnin' yunder up top of de mountain. Dere's sleep now. Most people looks on it like de friend of de slave. It don't nebber come to me, but al'ays goes away like a ole Maroon. I'se got to look on it like a enemy, 'ca'se I wants to die. De nigger dat sleeps is like de animal dat rolls in de mire. He can grunt, but he can't get 'way from de claws dat holds him."

Then ensued a brief pause, when he resumed:

"I al'ays got in my head dat time when the de nigger stealers tore me 'way from de big land whar I left all I care for in dis world. Dey took me and loaded me wid chains, and tumbled me down into de hol' jist like ef I war a bale o' cotton or a bag o' sugar. I can't think how I din't kill myself 'fore their eyes, and rob 'em of de money dey 'xpected to get for me. It was my mother, I suppose. When I seen her chained up 'fore me, and near by, I thought she were more miserabler than me, and ef I din't kear to live for myself, I ought to kear to live for her, and that may we might n't find slavery so bad a'ter all. I been deceived. I seen my mother fall all bloody under the cow-hide of the overseer; I seen her whip'ped to death, an' I could not help nor 'venge her. Brothers, we aint quite like bullocks dat draw de carts along. We be called slaves, and they make us chattels, but we got de sentiments and feelin's of men, and we got their instinct too. Dis what's riz up in me. I can't kip it down. It's growin' stronger an' stronger. 'Stead of growin' more humble; 'stead of being tamed down, I'se got to be a tiger. My heart 's got to be so full o' hatred to Slavery, and so big wid hate to de masters, dat I'm brim full, and I'm ready to take revenge anyhow."

He stopped to suppress the vehement emotions which overcame him, and presently continued with greater calmness:

"Folks says Slavery ain't no wus than it used to be. I says there wa'nt room for it to grow wusser. Have I got ar a place on my body whar you can lay your little finger without laying it on a scar made by the whip? I won't say de house dog—he's de master's friend, and he's well treated—but I'll say de horse in de stable; he 's a thousand times better off than we. He 's got niggers to wait 'pon him: he 's took out a walkin', and he gets his rest reg'lar: ef he eats only grass and corn he gets a plenty of both; so it aint no wonder he grows so sleek and fat, and pricks up his ears so sharp and proud. But we, brothers, we got on'y work, hidin's and misery day and night: so we 's skinned, lean, and hungry, and we goes about wid our heads hangin' down, tremblin' in de legs, and afeard and ashamed to shew ourselves among other men. For all dat every day you hears folks talk 'bout our being well off. How is we so, brothers? Ef we wants to walk out, a'ter our work 's done, and we 's tired and wants a change, can we do it? Aint dar de p'lice at de corners of de roads layin' in wait, like a ole wolf, to cotch us? And when we 's cotched, we 's hand-cuffed, and drove to jail, where we 's forced to stop all night. Next morning we 's took to de pillory or de whipping-post in de market-place, where dey strips us stark naked afore all de people, and whips us till de blood makes de ground all a puddle. A'ter dat we 's set to sweep the streets and 'pair de roads, wid a big chain round our necks. Dey says we's greedy. What we go to be greedy over? Hunger's al'ays greedy. We gets a bit of tapioca, which dey t'rows down 'fore us, jus like de gives wash to de hogs. Dey wouldn't giv' us dat, on'y to kip us from famishing. When we 's driv' by hunger at last to take a corn-cob—very likely we planted it, ourselves, and watererd wid our sweat—and we happens to be cotched, don't dey nigh kill us? Don't dey whip us; and twist our poor limbs; and tie us up to trees till we drops fainting; and bind our two thumbs wid wet cord; and keep us in dese horrible torments hours and hours? Don't dey put iron collars wid spikes on our necks; and horns and bells on our heads? Don't dey squeeze our heads or our feet 'tween two blocks of wood? Don't dey go so far as to muzzle us for fear we should eat de fruit dat falls from the trees and rots on de ground? Don't dey draw our teeth, too? Don't dey—but I won't go on, brothers: you knows it 's all true. I says we have been slaves long enough. It's time we took heart. It 's time we broke our chains, and took our revenge. Revolt is our word now, and it must be our last work. Let 's begin. Let 's rouse de plantations, and rise all our brother-slaves at once. Let 's bu'st on de island like a whirlwind. Let 's take our revenge. Let 's fire de fields our labour has made fruitful, and knock down de houses we built up, whose masters have got rich by making us work for 'em. Let de ruins cover de ground, and let de ground dat's drunk up our sweat, get fat wid de blood of our tormentors."

These sentiments were echoed by a low growl of assent, when the Antacime thus spoke:—

"Our brother, Sacalave, brings up tings dat makes de tears come up out ob de heart. I can't talk like he: my tongue can't go 'long wid my thoughts. I can't tell all what I suffered, but I shan't never forget it. I was on'y a piccaninny when dey stole me from home. I used to look a'ter de oxen in de fields, and one evenin', jes as I was going back, somebody laid hold of me round de body. I cried out, and kicked, and struggled, but de man put a gag in my mouth, and beat me near senseless, and told me he'd kill me. He then bound my arms behind my back, and taking me up like a log of wood, ran off wid me ever so far."

"We knows what it is," chimed in the others.

"Yes," resumed the others, "and you can feel what I felt when dey got me 'board de ship, and I began to think 'bout my friends and relations, and 'dat I was made a slave. Dey cut de rope off my arm, and put me in a dark place 'long wid ever so many more. Dey got ebber so many ob dese yer cabins, whar dey locked in de oder niggers, 'ca'se dey feared on 'em, dere was so many. We was like in a coffin, shut in wid de dying and de dead: we couldn't hardly breathe, and we went near to die wid de heat and thirst. Dey on'y giv' us salt things to eat, and some of 'em stinked so, we couldn't eat 'em."

"Yes, yes, what de niggers suffers 'board ship is right down horrid cruel," said one of the others. "I knows what it is, for dey made us eat de flesh of our dead broders, and when we got chased by a man-o'-war cruizer, dey t'rowed my broder overboard 'long wid a lot more: all alive."

"I don't know," resumed the previous speaker, what dey giv'n us to eat. It makes me sick now to think of it. I don't know either wedder dey t'rowed overboard any live niggers; I was too young to know every thing: but I seen 'em smash in with a iron-bar, de heads of de niggers who looked out of de cabin windows to breathe."

"Like as ef dey kill de drownin' man when his head 'bove water," said one of the others.

"Jes so," was the response.

"Ah, God nebber forget dat ar," ejaculated the third speaker."

"Nor me neider, broders," pursued the Antacime, his eyes glowing like live coals. "I seems to see now two of dem poor creatur's wid their murdered faces looking up at us as de fell down, struggling for blessed life, and coverin' us wid blood. Many long days and nights we was kep' shut up till at last dey landed us here in Bourbon. We war took out of de ship more like dead, and put into canoes which dey crammed full, and den shove' us all in de baracoons on de shore. I was so weak, and dey beat me to make me walk and keep up my head, dat I can't remember nothing more till I come to in a big shed. When I woke my heart was ready to break. I wanted never to wake no more. But broders, though its bad enough to be beat, and starved, and flayed, it aint nothing to the torments of seeing your wife and children sold at public auction, and beat naked before de eyes of every body. Dis de real suff'rin'—ca'se de mind can't bear it like de body bears blows. It makes one feel like mad, and as if one would like to kill everybody, or take one's own life."

A murmur of assent was given to this declaration. The speaker resumed, but in a more excited tone:

"De oder day de massa called Kaila to him. She seen someting wicked in his eye, an' she wouldn't go. He called her again, coaxin' like; but she hanged down her head, and didn't go none the more. Den he got angry and ax'ed ef she wa'nt coming quick; and when he seen she got more frightened den ebber, he got her laid hold of, stript and flogged her, and den shaved her head and trowed her in the black hole. Here's anoder ting. You seen de beautiful Ravana wid de big iron collar round her neck, and her hair all cut off. Well, dat war for the same 'fence. Dar aint no justice whar de massa can do jes' what he likes. If he kills any body, and de ting get talked 'bout, he on'y got to say de man died of sickness. But I tell you what, broders: we's in fault too. Dese tings been altered long time ago if niggers wa'nt as dey be towards one another. Day 'fore yesterday, de picaninny Koutkel picked up a half-rotten mango. He war hungry and ate it. Some of de people tell'd de massa, and den he told a nigger to hold de boy while he beat him. De massa couldn't do not'ing widout de niggers. Be n't it de niggers themselves makes de holes in de ground where dey puts de breedin' women in to flog 'em? Be n't it dey ties us up to de whippin' posts and de pickets? Be n't it dey dat's al'ays a spyin' out and telling everything dey see? I says de niggers is a'most as bad as de massas. Dey flatters de very folks dat heaps up such misery on 'em, and dey 'beys 'em and sets 'em again thar own colour, 'stead of tryin' to argue wid one 'nodder like friends, and 'fusin' to act 'gin their bredren. Why can't dey get togeder and say to de massas, 'We got hands and feet and blood like you, and we won't be trampled on no longer.' It's to 'tempt dis yer we come to palaver to-night, but if we does it, broders, don't let us burn, and plunder, and kill. Dat make God angry. We strong enough to get free widout killing anybody. Den why we burn de houses and 'stroy the fields? Dey aint done us no harm, and when we free we shall want 'em. When we palavered it well over, we'll go back to our friends, divide 'em into bands, and last of all, get all togeder, all at once, one day. We so strong in numbers, de massas be' feard to 'sist us. Den we cry out all togeder, 'We free, we free,' and free we shall be. De massas 'll live in de country all de same, only dey wont be no more dan we. If dey wont, we will leave em' de ships to go out of de country. Dat's my 'pinion. I gived it like I feels it. Now for anoder."

The Capre then spoke:

"In coming here brothers," he said, "my thoughts said I should not speak. I should listen. But you want my heart. I will give it you. The thing has thorns, but the silence of the mouth should not make the heart cry out. I will not tell you of my sufferings. Why should I? It would do no good. Do not we all know what a slave's life is? To tell you again of the torments we suffer in common, would not be to extinguish it but to fan the fire. To come to the point, brothers; you wish to revolt?"

"Yes! Yes!" answered they.

"And so do I," he answered; "our miserable fate justifies the attempt. But I am afraid we shall fail. Our brother Antacime, and our brother Sacalava have spoken of rising together, and of the revolt being general. Excuse me, I have no confidence in it."

"What! aint others in de same fire as we?" asked the Sacalave.

"I do not deny it brothers, but you have yourselves said there is no unity amongst you. How then can we risk speaking of a plan for a general rising? We might gain one, two, or three, and the fourth would probably be a false brother who would sell us. ?"

"What do you say? Sell us?"

"Yes, and then see the misery. We should be captured, without being able to raise a finger, or to break one chain, and our best blood would be sacrificed."

"What we got to care 'bout risking our life? what our life to us?" exclaimed the Antacime.

"I know, brothers, that death for us is better than life; but why a useless death? a death with shame and pain? Let us sound our friends."

"They are agreed."

"We must be sure of all."

"We are all one. No fear of dat."

"Then let us revolt."

"Yes! we will, and de sooner de better."

"We shall be shot down like wild beasts."

"Never mind. We can't die only once."

"Very well, brothers, let us try them, and let us suppose ourselves free. You must not think the affair is over. This island is too small. France will send out against us her ships of war: they will blow us up, burn our places down, kill us, make us slaves again, and our fate will be ten times worse than it is now. Listen to me, brothers. I have heard a paper talk. In France and England, the great countries of the whites, there are good men and women who think of us, and pray God for us, and who say that in spite of our black skin we are before God as white as themselves, and they are constantly asking their great King to remove our chains and give us our liberty."

"Our liberty! Give us our liberty?"

"Yes, brothers. Patience yet a little, then. The good day cannot be far distant. Here the whites will not free us; but that is of no consequence, because they have not the power of preventing it for ever. The great chiefs are yonder, and we shall have our liberty. Then too we shall have our houses, our bit of land, our own vegetables, and fruits, and poultry; and when we work, which we must still do, it will be for ourselves. We shall not then be beaten, but shall be masters of our own bodies, and of our own wives and children, who will remain with us to fill our hearts with joy, and share any troubles we may have. Do not then, my dear brothers, let us commit any act of folly. Let us wait for the good thing that is coming from yonder, and which they call Emancipation. Until it comes, and as we cannot live any longer on the plantation, let us run away. We will become maroons. We will go live in the mountain yonder. My grandfather has been there many and many a year, and they have never been able to catch him. He will be our chief, and will be glad to see us. We shall have abundance to eat and drink, and shall be free besides, to do as we please. What say you?"

"Dat's all very well," replied the Amboilama, after a momentary silence, "but dat aint de ting. I been maroon. I know what it is. I knows de mountain too, but it aint ours. What you say, broder Creole, is good and bad too. Dere bitter in it an sweet. Dere liberty, dat's de sweet: but den comes de bitter. Den de 'tachments; dem little white debbils dey bring up to hunt de nigger down wid, and dat dey pays for ebery runaway nigger's head dey brings in. It aint no use going up de mountains, and de dogs dey hunts out ob ebery hole and corner. Den when you's cotched, if dey don't kill you doin' on it, you knows what you's got to 'xpect: raw backs rubbed down wid pimento and salt and vinegar, and den grinding corn in de sun and rain and wind for all de long months you may live."

"No! 'twont fit no ways," remarked the Antacimine. "Al'ays in fear, al'ays on de look-out to be cotched at last to get punished dat aint de ting for me. Better stop wid massa and be miserable right off."

But the Amboilame suddenly made another suggestion, which the others listened to with that fixed attention so peculiar to the negro when interested. He proposed that they should seize a small vessel he had seen on the shore, and after storing it with provisions, should choose an opportunity of setting sail back to Madagascar.

"When we dere, broders, we get good every ting, and plenty. We go out hunting: we dance, and sing, and work, and sleep, jes when we like, long wid our families, and no one to say nothing to us. Dis what we do, den, broders; we get de ship and start."

"Yes! dat's de right plan," exclaimed the Sacalave. "I wanted a rising, 'cause I wanted revenge. My tong spoke like my heart felt. But if t'aint possible, t'aint no use trying. Dere on'y one thing I thinking of, broder, and dat is we no sailors, and de sea's like de massa: he don't know no pity. But sooner 'an stop here, I'll follow you. We can on'y go to de bottom."

"I'll go too," ejaculated the Antacime in a transport of joy.

"And I'll pray to God," said the Caffre, dolefully, "to prosper the voyage. But I cannot go with you. Your country is not mine."

"But ain't you our broder? Ain't your unhappy same as we? Our country will be your's, and you be a sight better off 'an here, where you al'ays be a slave."

"Perhaps, but though I thank you, brothers, I cannot go. The journey is not safe, and I must go and see my grandfather. I will pray for you, and trust in God to deliver me and our brethren."

The three Malagassays could not change the Creole's resolution, though they each besought him to accompany them. Finding him immovable on this point, they took their leave of him affectionately, and the four separated, departing as they had come, by different roads.*

Girdling the World With Telegraphic Wires.

We need not fortify ourselves against being astonished at anything in this sublunary state of existence. Our late fellow citizen, Tal. P. Shafner, is about surrounding the entire world with a magnetic band, and promises at an early day to vertify the prophecy of one of Shakspeare's heroes who spoke of girdling the globe in forty minutes. As is well known by our readers, Mr. Shaffner made the voyage to Europe last spring, and spent several months negotiating with the various powers, in reference to his circumambient telegraph. He has recently returned to New York, and is entirely confident of a successful termination of his enterprise, however it may startle the world.

In his European tour he acquired a thorough knowledge of the different modes of telegraphing and constructing lines in the old world. He negotiated with the Danish Government for the exclusive right to lay a line over Greenland, Iceland, the Faroe Isles, and Denmark, for the term of one hundred years; and acquired similar rights over Norway, Sweeden and Russia. With these and other rights, which he proposes to himself to secure, the success of his plan to girdle the world with electric telegraph no longer appears visionary or impracticable.

The route of his proposed line is as follows:—

Starting from the coast of Labrador, the width of the sea to Greenland is about five hundred miles. From the point of landing, the line is to extend underground around Cape Farewell to a point on the east coast of Greenland, favourable for a submarine connection with Iceland. A subterranean line across to the eastern coast of that island will connect with a submarine wire running to the Faroe Isles, and thence to Norway, landing at or in the vicinity of Bergen. By this route there will be no submarine section of more than five hundred miles, and the loss or failure of one section will not destroy the others. In a line direct from Ireland to Newfoundland the failure of any part occasions a loss of the whole.

After landing on the coast of Norway, it is intended to run the line to Christiana, the capital of Norway, and from thence branches to Copenhagen and Stockholm. The Danish Government has bound itself to furnish proper connections with the Governments on the continent and Great Britain. Consequently, it will not be necessary to run a cable from the Faroe Isles to the Shetlands, Orkneys, and the North Scotland. Treaties with the Emperor of Russia contemplate the extension of the line from Stockholm, in Sweden, to St. Petersburg, across or along the coast of Finland. By the construction of this section, America will be able to transmit intelligence direct to Russia, and thus establish most intimate relations between the subjects of the Czar and the sovereigns of the United States.

Leaving St. Petersburg, Mr. Shaffner proposes to run his line to Moscow, or connect at the latter place with the imperial lines already in operation—thence to Kazan, across the Ural Mountains, into Asia, passing through Orusk, Kolivan, Kausk, Oudisnk to Irkoutsk, near Lake Baikal. This is near the great tea country in Chinese Tartary, whence the Russian tea is brought overland on waggons. The trade in this tea, which is said to be the best in the world, is very large, and the telegraph, it is supposed, will tend to increase it materially.

From Irkoutsh it is intended to run the line to the sea of Ochotsk; either north to Yokoutsk, or south with the Amour river, and thence along the coast of the Sea of Ochotsk to Iansk, and across the Gulf to Cape Utkoloka, Kamtschatka, and thence along the Aelutian Isles to Aliaska Peninsula or Cooke's Inlet, in North America. From this point the line will be run along the Pacific Coast to Oregon, and south to San Francisco, California. This range is entirely south of the latitude of St. Petersburg, and in fact, the line can be carried around by the Behring Straits, and be South of the Arctic Circle.

From San Francisco, Mr. Shaffner proposes to run the line along the best route to the Salt Lake, and thence to the western boundary of Missouri, where it will intersect the existing section of the California line, built by him a few years ago. Joining the great lines in America, the earth will be girdled with one continuous and unbroken flame of electric light.

RELIGION carries its own evidence with it more than history or science. It should rest more on the soul's own consciousness, experience, and observation.

NEW PLANT.—The scarcity of corn in France had drawn attention to a new plant recently introduced from China which promises to supersede to a certain extent the use of beetroot in the manufacture of sugar and the distillation of alcohol. The Agricultural Committee of Toulon has recently addressed a report to the Minister of War with respect to the use of the plant in question. It is called the sorgho or holcus sacharatus, and was first introduced into France in 1851, by M. de Montigny, the French Consul in China, who sent some grains of the seed to the Government. Since then the culture of the plant has been commenced with success in the Provinces, and promises to be of great advantage to Algeria. The sorgho has been called the "sugar-cane of the north of China" and numerous experiments have recently been tried, with a view to ascertaining if it possesses the properties necessary for producing a crystalizable syrup, so as to become a rival to the sugar-cane and beetroot. According to the report of the Toulon Agricultural Association, it would appear to have those properties. The fact has been ascertained by a series of experiments made in the department of the War. It also appears to be richer in the saccharine principle than any known plant, excepting the vine. The sorgho is not a new discovery, it has been used from time immemorial, by the inhabitants of the North of China, who extract large quantities of sugar from it.

The Crimea.

The Crimea is a peninsula of about 8000 square miles, possessing a great variety of natural resources than perhaps any territory of equal extent in Europe. Three sides of it are washed by the Black Sea, and the north-east side by the Sea of Azoff. It forms a part of the Russian government of Taurida; and its present condition, as a country neglected depressed and debased, is a standing testimony to the evil influences of Russian rule. So far from keeping pace with the progress of the age, the Crimea has sadly retrograded. Her products are shipped off in considerable quantities to Russia, much of them extorted from her in return for the Czar's protection. The fertility of some parts of the Crimea is so great, that several of the most valuable of the fruits of the earth can be cultivated, with but slight labour, in the greatest profusion, and to an astonishing extent of increase. This was known to the ancient Greeks, and was taken advantage of by Greece under her system of colonisation. Six centuries before the christian era, they had begun to form colonies on the northern shores of Asia Minor; and we learn from Strabo, and other writers of antiquity, that they preferred this peninsula, from its containing so many inducements to industrial enterprise, particularly in the richness of its soil, which, it is affirmed, was found to yield a return of fifty times the seed. At one time, indeed, it was considered the granary of Greece, especially of Athens, whose territory, being of small extent, and of indifferent fertility, was unable to maintain its large population by its own produce. There is a deep classical interest in this subject. Demosthenes has, more than once, had his eloquence excited by it. Besides breadstuffs, it still exports hides, morocco, and other fine leathers, silk stuffs of eastern fabric and pattern, camel's hair, wool, skins, dried fruit, wines, and an endless variety of other products, for which the Crimea, with its appurtences, has comparatively inexhaustible resources. This population has become a very mixed one, and on this account is only the more likely to sustain an advanced civilisation and industrial progress. The largest proportion, no doubt, consists of Mogule and Turks, united under the common designation of Tartars; but there are Greeks and Russians, and even Germans, in considerable numbers among them, and these latter have for some time past, it is said, been rapidly increasing. —Journal of Commerce.

LONGEVITY IN CANADA.—The Montreal Herald mentions some singular instances of longevity brought to light by the late census. It says:—We understand that more than twenty persons are returned whose ages exceed one hundred years. The most venerable patriarch of these, if we make no mistake, resides in the township of Grey, Simcoe county, aged 115 years. Ninety-five years ago he scaled the cliffs of Quebec with General Wolfe, so that his residence in Canada is coincident with British rule in this province. He has attached himself to the Indians, and lives in all respects like them. This veteran is named Abraham Miller. Gallantry will not permit us to omit honorable mention of an almost equally distinguished person of the other sex. Helen Maguire is 106 years of age. She still dresses without help, and walks out for air and exercise whenever the weather is sufficiently fine to tempt her from the chimney corner. She still has all her faculties, and can thread a needle without spectacles.

A ROBBER'S CAVE.—The Court of Assize at Munich, was lately occupied with the trial of robberies and several murders. What distinguished these men was that they lived altogether in the Gil Blas style. They inhabited a vast cavern in the Schillbinger Forest, the entrance to which was concealed by large trunks of trees. Two and twenty steep steps led to the chambers below, five in number, two of which were twenty feet long by nine wide. In the kitchen was placed a vast fire-place, the chimney of which issued in the midst of a thick clump of trees, and through precaution, fire was only lighted there by night. The robbers had also their stable and store-houses all under ground, and at the end of a long corridor there was even found a sort of slaughter-house, where they killed the animals which they required for food. The Court condemned five of the accused to death, and the others, either to imprisonment with hard labor, or to simple imprisonment.

Facts About Guano.

A writer in the Nottinghamshire Guardian introduces into a dissertation on "the Chemistry of Manures" the following interesting facts about guano:

Before entering upon the subject of guano, as a manure, I will relate to you a few interesting facts respecting it communicated to me by a friend (Capt. Fyfe, brother to the editor of the Nottinghamshire Guardian), both as regards the extent of its supply and the sources of its production. Last year Captain Fyfe visited Peru, and brough over from the Chincha Islands a cargo of guano. His account of these islands is totally different from any I have yet seen, published, for instead of the guano being exhausted in eight or ten years, which most writers assert, he says, that the supply comparatively speaking, is inexhaustible—the beds of guano being in many places more than one hundred feet thick, and two of the three principal islands being yet untouched.

On climbing the cliffs an innumerable quantity of skeletons of large marine animals were presented to his view, such as those of the seal and walrus, or sea-horse, sticking up out of the surface, in such quantities that the place appeared to be completely white all over; and these account in some measure for the white lumps frequently met with in Peruvian guano, which are no doubt the decomposed vertebræ of these animals.

Passing along over the island he could scarcely take a step without his foot breaking through into a hole in which the guano bird makes its nest.

These holes extend five or six yards into the bed of guano, and the birds are continually occupied in fetching fish from the sea to feed their young ones. The number is so immense that the air seems completely alive with them. By this account (on which the most implicit reliance can be placed) you will perceive that guano is not all excrementitious matter, as we have hitherto been led to suppose, but consists of a considerable amount of decomposed animal matter in addition to the excrement of birds. It is evident from this brief sketch that the supply of guano will be at present by no means limited, and therefore it rests with yourselves to petition government, through your respective members of parliament, to endeavour to devise means to get it imported into this country at a cheaper rate. I have no doubt that this could be done, if it were set about in good earnest, by some of the more influential of your body; not perhaps so quickly as our gallant fellows crowned the heights of Alma in the late terrible conflict in the East, but nevertheless I think it might be accomplished ere long. Of course the distance of the priod will be in proportion to the extent to which you exert yourselves in the matter.

From a very remote period (about two thousand years) guano has been the chief manure applied to the land on the arid soils of Peru. As the quantity generally used does not exceed 4 cwt. per acre, you will perceive from the analysis below that this could not possibly supply all the alkaline salts whica are required by plants. Professor Liebig says: "We can only attribute the different quantities of guano necessary for producing the same results on different soils to the unequal quantities of ingredients necessary to vegetation contained in the soil, and not to those contained in guano. On a soil rich in alkali only a moderate quantity of guano is requisite: but on soils poor in alkalies it would take a large amount of guano to compensate for the want of potash or soda in the soil." The reason why the effects of guano are more uniform than perhaps any other artificial manure, with the exception of bones, is, that it contains a greater variety of the constituents of plants, that portion of it which is excrementitious matter partaking more of the nature and properties of farm-yard manure. Each of these bears a pretty equal resemblance to farm-yard manure, inasmuch as both of them supply phosphoric acid and ammonia, and both are derived, like it, from the vegetable food of animals.

Undoubtedly guano is the most useful manure that has ever yet been imported into this country, and the reason why guano which is found in our own climate is of far less value than the Peruvian is, that the greater part of the soluble portion of that which is produced in this country (in the islands of Scotland for instance) is washed out by the rain.

HOOF BOUND.

The following are the directions of Dr. Dadd for this disease: In all cases we must endeavour to give the frog a bearing on the ground; and in order to do this the shoe ought to be removed. A dry, brittle, and contracted hoof may be improved by repeated poulticing with soft soap and rye meal, applied cold. So soon as the hoof softens, let it be dressed, night and morning, with turpentine, linseed oil, and powdered charcoal, equal parts. Yet, after all, a run at grass in a soft pasture, the animal having nothing more than tips on his feet, is the best treatment. A very popular notion exists that cow manure has a wonderful effect on a contracted hoof; but it is the candid opinion of the author, and no doubt the reader will coincide, that filth and dirt of every kind are unfavorable to healthy action. Such remedy, aside from its objection on the score of decency, savors too much of by-gone days, when live eels were sent on an errand down horses' throats to unravel their intestines. If any benefit belongs to such objectionable application, it is due to the property it possesses of retaining moisture; therefore cold poultices and water are far superior. Clay and moist earth, placed in the stall for the horse to stand on, are far inferior to a stuffing of wet oakum, which can be removed at pleasure. In order to keep it in contact with the sole, we have only to insinuate two strips of wood between the sole and shoe; one running lengthwise and the other crosswise of the foot. It affords considerable pressure to the foot, is cooling and cleanly, and is far superior to the above articles.

Apple Trees from Seed.—Mr. G. W. Peters, an old settler in Washtenaw Co., in the town of Scio, informs us that in 1827 he procured from Detroit a bushel of very good, large, red, fall apples. The seed of these apples he planted, and grew from them several hundred trees, from one to two hundred of which he set in an orchard for himself. In five or six years from the seed they began to bear, and the fruit of no two trees are alike. With three or four exceptions he says the fruit was good. Some trees bear white, some green, yellow, red, striped, some of different shades, and russets; a part are fall apples, while others are medium, and others very late keepers; and what is more singular, some are quite acid, others sub-acid and some sweet. We visited the orchard a few day ago, and examined a large number of the varieties, and found them very much resembling the following well-known kinds: Spitzenberg, Golden Russets, Newton Pippins, Swaar, Baldwin's Fall Pippins, Wine Apple, and Rambo.

The above shows very conclusively that there is no probability that apple seeds will produce the same fruit, unless under very peculiar circumstances. Of all the trees in Mr. Peters' orchard, one only produced fruit nearly like the original.—Michigan Farmer.

THE WAR—THE COLONIES.

Sir. G. Grey having, by order of Her Majesty, laid certain papers on the table of the House, said—In accordance with the promise I made to the hon. and learned member for North Staffordshire (Mr. Abberley), before the recess, I now lay these papers on the the table, and I will take the opportunity of briefly explaining to him of what they consist. They are addresses and resolutions passed by public bodies in various British colonies in reference to the subject of the war in which this country is now engaged. In all the addresses which have been received, the House will be gratified to find an expression of feeling of the most devoted loyalty and attachment to Her Majesty, and also a feeling of the most ardent and earnest sympathy towards this country in reference to the war that is now being waged against Russia. (Hear, hear.) Some of the addresses will be found to contain more substantial proofs of that attachment, by the great liberality evinced by those from whom they proceed, in contributing to the wants of the widows and orphans left destitute by the loss of their husbands and parents in the course of the war. (Hear, hear.) Among them is a joint address from the Council and Legislative Assembly of Canada, tendering their congratulations to her Majesty on the glorious successes which have attended her army in the East, and expressing their readiness to contribute to the relief of the widows and children of the soldiers of the allied armies of England and France who have fallen during the war. (Cheers.) I have the satisfaction to state that this address was intrusted to Lord Elgin, who brought it to this country from Canada, on his leaving the administration of that colony, and that it constituted one of the last acts of his Government. I have since received from Sir Edmund Head, the present Governor-General of Canada, two draughts of £10,000 each, being the sum of £20,000 appropriated by the Legislature of Canada for that purpose. (Cheers.) Seeing the hon. and learned member for North Staffordshire in his place, who on a former occasion asked me for information respecting the clergy reserves in Canada, I will now state that I have received a despatch from Lord Elgin, saying that the Clergy Reserves Bill and Seigneur Tenures Bill have been passed into a law, and that I have myself written to Canada to have copies of those measures forwarded home, in order that I may lay them on the table of the house at an early day.

Mr. Adderley begged to ask the right hon. baronet whether, as there had been such a strong expression of sympathy on the part of the representatives of the people of Canada towards this country in regard to the present war, he had any intention of proposing any acknowledgment on the part of the Imperial Parliament, of the high sense they entertained of such a feeling being expressed by the legislative body of a colony which constituted one of the most important and most essential resources of this country.

Sir G. Grey begged to remind the honorable and learned gentleman, that these addresses were to her Majesty: and he need hardly say that he had received her Majesty's commands to express to those parties from whom they proceeded her sentiments respecting them. With respect to the question put to him by the hon. and learned gentleman as to the course which might be pursued by that House, he would take the opportunity of answering it on some future occasion.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Jan. 26.

RESIGNATION OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

The Earl of Aberdeen, referring to the retirement of Lord John Russell from the Cabinet, stated that he was not aware of the whole of the motives which had led to that step. He would, however, read to the House the letter which he had received from Lord John Russell, tendering his resignation. The letter stated that Mr. Roebuck had given notice of a motion to inquire into the conduct of the war; that he (Lord J. Russell) did not see how it was to be resisted; but, as it involved a dissatisfaction in the conducting of the war by his colleagues, the only course open to him was to tender his resignation to her Majesty. He knew, two months ago, that his noble friend had not approved of the mode in which the war was being carried on, but he thought that those objections had been all removed. Deeply as he regretted the retirement of Lord J. Russell, the Government intended to oppose Mr. Roebuck's motion to the utmost; and upon the result of that motion, the fate of the Ministry would depend.

Earl Grey gave notice that he should move on Monday, the motion of which he had given notice for Thursday next.

The Earl of Winchester, after commenting on the conduct of a portion of the press, and especially of the Times, inquired whether the correspondent of that Journal had received a passage in one of her Majesty's vessels to Malta, and had since obtained rations from the army.

The Duke of Newcastle said that the Times' correspondent had proceeded to the East at his own expense, and in his own way. He believed that he had received rations, and he had written to express his disapproval of such a proceeding. He trusted that the correspondent's own sense of what was due to himself would not permit him to take those rations in future.

After some remarks from the Earl of Harrowby and others, the subject dropped, and the House adjourned at a quarter to seven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Lord John Russell entered the House from behind the Speaker's chair, and took his seat amidst some faint cheers, on the fourth bench behind Ministers. Colonel North, who had given notice of a question to the Lord President of the Council, and Mr. H. Berkeley, and Mr. Craven Berkeley, who had given notice of questions to the Secretary-at-War, who was not in his place, severally postponed their questions, amidst some laughter, till Monday next.

RESIGNATION OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

Lord John Russell rose amidst breathless attention. He said:—Upon Tuesday last, when I was present in this House, the hon. member for Sheffield gave notice of motion for a select committee to enquire into the condition of our army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of the departments of the Government entrusted with the carrying on of the war. I of course had thought it possible that some member might move for an inquiry of this description; but had not, however, fully certified the course which I should take; that depended much upon the nature of the motion, and partly upon the quarter whence it came. With respect to the power of inquiry I must say that I regard it as one of the most valuable privileges of this House. This house has no power of directing measures to be taken; but by the power of inquiry it can correct abuses—reform mal-administration and strength establishments. A motion for inquiry, however, may be resisted upon two grounds—one that there are no evils existing of sufficient magnitude to call for inquiry; the other that sufficient means have been taken to remedy those evils, and that they can best be cured by other means than by resorting to the inquisitorial power of this House. No one can deny the melancholy condition of our army before Sebastopol. The accounts which arrive from that quarter every day are not only painful, but horrible and heart-rending; but I am sure that no one would oppose for a moment any measure which he thought would be likely to cure, or even to mitigate those evils. (Cheers.) I must say, with the official knowledge which I possess, that there is to me something quite inexplicable in the misfortunes in this campaign. If I had been told last year, as a reason against landing in the Crimea, that our troops were to be seven miles from sea, and from a secure port, and that at that seven miles' distance they should be in want of food, clothes, and fuel to such a degree that they perish at the rate of from ninety to one hundred a day, I should have considered such a prediction as utterly preposterous. It was not by denying the existence of the evil, therefore, that I could hope to induce the House to refuse the proposition of the honourable member for Sheffield. I had further to reflect that I was not in a position to give a faint "no" to the motion, but that I must stand in the front of the battle and manfully take my weight in opposing the appointment of that committee. Neither could I oppose it on the ground that the evil had been remedied. The noble lord then proceeded to read extracts from correspondence between himself and the Earl of Aberdeen, which showed that toward the end of October or beginning of November he had suggested to the Earl of Aberdeen that the offices of Minister for War and Minister at War should be merged into one person, and that that person should be Lord Palmerston. Lord Aberdeen had, in reply to this suggestion of the noble lord, expressed his doubt as to the possibility of one person fulfilling the duties of both offices with efficiency. Again, he had ventured to press the importance of such a change upon the noble lord at the head of the Government, but still the expediency of such a change was denied by Lord Aberdeen, on the ground that it would weaken the Government. This occurred on the 30th of November; and the only doubt he now had was, whether he ought not then to have pressed his opinion, but he had been dissauded from taking that step by his noble friend the Home Secretary himself. So matters went on till that which was before an expediency became an urgent necessity, and when he came to consider the course he should take on Mr. Roebuck's motion, he felt that he could not, while admitting the sufferings of our troops in the Crimea, fairly and honestly come forward and say that the most perfect arrangements had been made to carry on the war; he felt that he could not, therefore, resist an inquiry in the conduct of the war. He then wrote to Lord Aberdeen that he could not oppose the motion for inquiry, and as it involved a censure on the war department, he thought it right to tender his resignation. To this communication he got no answer, but on the following evening his noble friend informed him that he had been at Windsor, and that her Majesty had been pleased to accept his resignation. Referring to the position of our foreign relations, the noble lord stated his belief that it was in consequence of the large army of 500,000 men which had been raised by Austria that had abated much of the pretensions of the Emperor of Russia, and made him consent to terms which in August last he rejected. With respect to the terms on which a peace should be made, he thought it right to state that, having recently conversed with Lord Aberdeen on the subject, he was convinced that the noble lord would not consent to a peace that was not just and honorable. The speech of the noble lord was received with loud cheers.

Lord Palmerston could not allow the speech of the noble lord to pass without thanking him for the complimentary terms in which he had been referred to. He admitted the right of any public man to resign office, but strongly urged the noble lord to remain in office. He thought it would have been better had Lord J. Russell stated the reasons which prevented him from opposing the Committee of Inquiry, and give the Government time to consider the matter with a view to re-construct the war-department—to choose between adopting the motion of Mr. Roebuck and the loss of his services.

MR. ROEBUCK'S MOTION.

Mr. Roebuck then rose to state the reasons for which he considered it necessary to make an inquiry into the conduct of the war, but on account of physical weakness was unable to proceed. He simply moved for a select committee to inquire into the condition of our army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of those departments of the Government whose duty it had been to minister to the wants of that army.

Mr. S. Herbert said he felt some hesitation in rising to reply to a motion when the charges which it implied had not been made. The right hon. gentleman repeated the difficulties under which the Government had labored in the formation and management of the British army which had been sent to the Crimea. He stated that food, clothing, and covering had been sent out sufficient for an army of twice the magnitude of that which had been sent out, and that it was not the want of provisions and stores that was complained of, but the impossibility of removing them from Balaklava. It was difficult to say where the evil originated, but the Government intended to write to the Commander-in-Chief of our gallant army in the Crimea to ask him to tell the Government where the mischief lay, and to use his supreme power to displace incompetent persons, and to put experienced men in their places. It was not in the power of the Government till they got such information, to censure the conduct of individuals who were fighting bravely before Sebastopol. Referring to the motion before the House, he observed that it would be very injurious to delay any measures to remedy the evils complained of, until a select committee had gone into the evidence and reported upon the subject; its effect would be to render the Government inefficient, and to paralyse the army. The proper course to pursue, if they considered the Government incompetent for their duty, would be to put an end to it by a direct vote, and not waste time by an inquiry which would probably last till August. In conclusion, he called upon the House to consider the question of the competence of the Ministers, who conducted the war, and give a plain, speedy, and distinct division on that point.

Mr. Drummond believed that it was to be attributed to some member of the Government that an army, three times victorious, had been without food, clothing, or covering. The noble lord resigned because the culpable person had not been discovered, and he did not think Mr. S. Herbert was to blame, but it was right that the country should know where the blame rested; for this reason he supported the motion of Mr. Roebuck, and proceeded, at considerable length, to criticise the conduct of the War Department, quoting several letters from the Crimea to show that, though a sufficient quantity of food and clothing had been sent out, the arrangements were so bad that potatoes rotted at Balaklava, and the men were a twelvemonth in arrear of clothing, while the clothes that were sent out remained at Scutari.

A number of other members having expressed sentiments opposed to the existing order of things in the management of the war department, the debate was adjourned till Monday, and the House adjourned.

From the Times, of 26th January,

The Times on the Resignation.

The announcement made last night by the Secretary of the Treasury to the House of Commons, that Lord John Russell has tendered his resignation of the office he filled in the Government, and that his resignation has been accepted by her Majesty, confirms the rumours which had been in circulation since yesterday morning, and explains the circumstance that Lord John Russell had not attended the Cabinet Council since Tuesday last. Both Houses of Parliament, upon receiving this intimation, adjourned to this day, when it is expected that an explanation of this important occurrence will be given by the Ministers of the Crown. Under these circumstances, we shall not attempt to penetrate all the motives which have led to this decision; but we believe that the ostensible reason which Lord J. Russell assigned for addressing his resignation to the head of the Government, was his reluctance or inability to face the motion of which Mr. Roebuck had given notice. This motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the state of the army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of the War Departments of the Government, was announced to the House of Commons, on the re-assembling of Parliament, on Tuesday afternoon. The next morning, and without further deliberation with any of his colleagues, Lord John Russell proceeded to address his resignation to Lord Aberdeen, thus virtually declining to appear in the House of Commons as a representative of a government in which he had borne a conspicuous part, and apparently attempting to decline that responsibility which attaches itself to every member of the Administration. In this respect, the conduct of Lord John Russell, so far as it is at present known, presents a wide and painful deviation from the rules of political conduct which have usually been observed with fidelity in this country. We are perfectly aware that Lord John Russell has throughout shown great impatience of the position in which the failure of the previous Cabinet, of which he was the head, had placed him in the present Administration; and that his immediate adherents have not desisted from their efforts to recover for him the post he had ceased to hold. The public have observed that, by his protracted absence from London during the whole of the autumn, when military events of the greatest importance were in progress, and by his frequent appearance as a provincial lecturer, he endeavoured to raise a distinction between himself and the more assiduous members of the government; but as he continued to hold office in Lord Aberdeen's Ministry, and had given no recent signs of withdrawing from it, he continued to be responsible for its policy and its acts; and we can remember no example of a minister retiring from a cabinet on the day before a great Parliamentary discussion on its past conduct. That such a discussion must take place on the meeting of Parliament was certain. The motion of which Mr. Roebuck has given notice, is consistent with usage and precedent, for a similar inquiry was made into the conduct of the Walcheren Expedition, not by a select committee, but by a committee of the whole House. Lord John Russell must have anticipated such a discussion, and if he was not prepared to meet it, he might have resigned at a moment less convenient to his colleagues, and less injurious to the country; it would surely have been more honorable to fall with the other members of the cabinet than to consult his own pleasure or interest by leaving them in the lurch.

Constantinople News.

The Moniteur publishes the following extract from the Journal de Constantinople of 11th of January:—

"A letter from Kamiesch of the 8th of January says:—The batteries of mortars of the French army cause considerable annoyance to the Russians, who have retreated in great numbers towards Simpheropol."

The Peace Conferences.

Vienna, Jan. 21.—The Vienna Cabinet has received despatches from London and Paris announcing the determination of the Western Powers not to relax their military efforts on account of what transpired on the 7th. A despatch to the same effect has been transmitted from this court to London and Paris, respecting the military preparations of Austria.

Accounts from Berlin state that the Austrian Cabinet on the 6th and 10th instant addressed two notes to the German Governments, informing them of the discussions which had taken place in the Conference of Vienna.

Prussia and the Western Powers.

Paris, Sunday, Jan. 21.—The chief political news to-day is that Prussia, who, notwithstanding her refusal to join the Austrian alliance with the Western Powers, pretended to have a right, as a great European power, to participate in any conference having for its object to modify treaties to which she was a party, has made a protest against the validity of any resolutions which may be come to by the new conference about to be opened at Vienna. The answer to this protest will, in all probability, be given by a French army on the Rhine before three months are over. The news from Germany affords small prognostics of peace. According to the Weimar Gazette, Count Nesselrode only authorized Prince Gortschakoff to accept the four points in the sense attributed to them by the Russian Cabinet, and with very important modifications, especially with regard to the third point, relative to the revision of the treaty of 1841. Both the Presse and the Patrie of this evening sum up the latest news as being to the effect that the Emperor of Russia is in no disposition to make serious concessions.

Austria and Prussia.

Brussels, Jan. 25.—Letters received today from the German capitals bear witness to the uneasy feeling caused throughout Germany by the refusal of the Prussian Court to act cordially, or indeed at all, with Austria in the present crisis of continental affairs. The last despatch of Count Buol, which has reached us simultaneously from Germany and England, has brought this opposition into strong relief. We hear on good authority, that there is a further despatch, addressed immediately to the Prussian Court, renewing the demand of mobilisation. We are also told that Austria has signified her resolution, in case she should not carry with her the majority in the Diet at Frankfort, to accept such alliances as she can find in Germany, leaving the non-active members of the Confederation to take the consequences. This is bold language, supposing it to have been held. The realisation of such a threat would expose the worthlessness of the Germanic Confederation as an expression and instrument of German unity in a most instructive and useful manner. We are assured by the Wurzburg Gazette that Hanover, Brunswick, Baden, and the two Hesses have declared for Austria. Saxony and Wurtemburgh are against mobilisation; and Bavaria is undecided.

Doings at Scutari.

Sir,—Should you deem the accompanying copy of a letter I have just received from the hospital at Scutari, worthy of publication in your journal, it is perfectly at your service.

I have the honour to remain, &c.,
Southsea, Jan. 21. E. Napier.

"Scutari, Jan. 7.

"Dear Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your three kind notes and announcement of things sent by the Royal Albert, Cumberland, and Charity. The sheepskin coats you mentioned are coming down from Trieste, bought in Moravia. Buffalo cloaks are now going up in the Gottenberg (from England) which sails to-morrow for Balaklava [no warm clothing is landed here, except hospital dresses]; some are gone on to Balaklava. The Royal Albert landed for Scutari only one box, nothing could be got at while she stayed [about 39 hours], 2,500 men being on board—a very extraordinary amount of combined power—and the men I thought, in good spirits on the 20th day of their voyage.

"We have bought a good deal of warm clothing, and had much bought by the Evening Mail Commissioner. Miss Nightingale has given out 2,000 flannel and 2,000 cotton shirts on the requision of medical men, besides socks, drawers, &c. The men come in shirtless, or have their shirts [worn six weeks] cut off them, and when they go they have to take away their shirts, &c.; so that it is like clothing the army.

"I have sent papers up, and will do so again, as you wisely hint it should be done.

"We have now 1,150 men buried since Alma, 3,500 in these hospitals, but in all together, ships included, 4,600. The deaths from wounds of the above 1,150 are 303; poor fellows, though wounds heal slowly between the two seas, they have done well on the whole, and almost all the amputations on the field have succeeded; the non-success of many others is accounted for by the wish of the surgeons to avoid amputation if possible, and the consequent stigma of performing them to get troublesome cases through; and therefore many have been deferred too long, till the patient had not circulation enough to make the vis vitæ triumph. I believe there has been a good share of medical talent and medical care since we came (the eve of the battle—viz., the 4th November); generally the sick have been well attended, but particularly they would have wanted clothing and extra diet. Miss Nightingale has been enabled by her supporters to afford these in enormous proportions—2,000 flannel shirts for instance—and to 550 to 720 men, 16 milkpails full of arrowroot, with 1½, bottle of port wine in each, every evening and on arrival, the men come down now sadly worn out. Lord Napier is often here, and his excellent wife, and exercises a judicious kindness and sound discrimination in this very pressing state of calamity."

Sponge and Salt Trade at Key West, Fla.—The sponge fisheries at Key West, Fla., are becoming very important. The demand at the present moment is not so great as usual, owing, doubtless, to the scarcity of money at the North, yet the fishermen have realized the past year from $60,000 to $80,000 for that collected among the Florida reefs and inlets. The salt crop of the last season amounted to near 70,000 bushels, all of which is disposed of except 3,000 to 4,000 bushels retained by the proprietor for fishermen, and to give ballast to vessels when they need it. The price through the season has been 25 to 30 cents per bushel, delivered alongside vessels, in bulk. It is, however, usually delivered to vessels in gunny bags, the purchaser of the salt paying extra for the bags, and for putting up.

A Counterfeiter Caught.—Henry Augustus Prevost Holland, who was arrested in Richmond, Shipton, in October last, on a charge of uttering a forged Montreal Bank note, and who escaped to the United States, was arrested in Portland, Me., on the 27th ult., on the complaint of High Constable Clark. After undergoing an examination, he was committed to jail to await his order from the United States Goverment to be given up for trial in this province. Mr. Holland had been figuring largely in the Portland papers, as a persecuted and injured man. He had applied for admission to the jail in that city, to see a prisoner charged with counterfeiting, and for this purpose represented himself as an Attorney acting on behalf of the Canadian Government. Not being able to show any authority for this pretension, and from other suspicious circumstances, he was placed under arrest. It was his letter of complaint, published in the State of Maine, that led to his present arrest. —Sherbrooke Gazette.

Slaves in Kansas.—The Kansas Herald says that there are but very few slaves in the Territory south of Kansas River; there are probably none, save those in the possession of the Indians, or the Methodist Mission. North of the river there are said to be very few in the region of Fort Leavenworth, mostly owned by Government officials.

To our Friends in the Western States.

We are under the necessity of announcing that Castus S. Depp, of Niles, Michigan, is no longer an agent for this paper. From information upon which we can rely, we learn that many subscriptions received by him, to this paper from friends in those States have neither been forwarded to us, nor have the funds for the same. We are surprised to learn that not content with withholding names and subscriptions, and with keeping twice the per centage agreed upon, he has been pleased to appoint local agents, and in other ways assume labors in no way connected with his former position as local agent for Niles. Every day brings to our knowledge fresh evidence of the utter unreliability of some itinerant colored "brother" or other, and we are obliged to add, that from evidence in our hands, from the scene of Mr. Depp's recent operations, we cannot consider him an exception—it does seem that the game of gouge is the one most familiar to the thousand and one declaimers on colonization, anti-slavery, and anything else, to which we have been informed that Mr. Depp belongs. If Mr. Depp pleases, we will attend to the appointing of agents, and our business generally, and he will stop his operations against us.

We would return our thanks, however, to the friends in Rockford, Ill., and say to those who paid Mr. Depp, we have not got their names or money; but if R. W. Armstrong will take the local agency, he will have our sincere thanks.

Mr. Ward.

We have received from the Rev. S. R. Ward, the sum of four shillings and four pence half-penny currency, as a donation to the Provincial Union, which will be paid to the Treasurer on application. We would just state here, that Mr. Ward declines to act as President of the Union.

Our reason for publishing what may by some be thought a private matter, is the desire to answer the very frequent inquiries made of us by ladies and gentlemen in this city and through the country, as to what Mr. Ward is doing, when he is coming back, and other questions naturally suggested by his supposed connection with the Freeman, all of which it has been impossible for us to answer satisfactorily, heretofore "not knowing."

The Citizen of the World is a new paper just started in Philadelphia, under the editorial charge of Elihu Burritt, the well known peace advocate. The Citizen will take the highest ground in favor of human rights, in connexion with the advocacy of the peace principle. The Journal will be published monthly, at fifty cents a year. The volume commences with the January number.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Messrs. Editors,—I read this morning in the New York Herald, a long article by a former American Consul to Morocco, Africa, Thomas N. Carr. Said writer having for his object to impress upon the United States' government the importance of putting on foot immediate measures for opening a trade with the above country, and the great interest to be derived therefrom. Its immediate necessity is urged in order to secure a foot-hold preceding the English and French. The subject is one, I think, not to be looked upon with indifference by colored men, especially those of the United States, however they may eschew or disavow African colonization. It seems that the British Government, thus far has, as we hope she may, kept ahead in this matter, as she has abundant means of doing so. She has the alliance and friendship of the black races all over the world, large portions of them being her own loyal subjects. She is, prepared, therefore, to fit out expeditions of her own colored subjects, headed by either a white or colored corps of scientific men. Nor is it her interest alone to use these means for sustaining supremacy, but it is the interest of humanity and of the descendants of Africa, wherever chance may have cast their lot, as it opens the grandest field for enterprize and development that has presented itself to man in modern times. Was a well selected and well arranged expedition of colored men, with a competent scientific corps, for the purpose of investigation and trade, to prepare itself and present its object to British capitalists, there is no doubt but that they would get abundant support for such an undertaking. Besides, the United States should be prevented at all hazard from such an undertaking, from the very reason that the pioneers would be more likely to engage indirectly and through their agents in the slave trade, as her missionaries have been known to do, until a legitimate trade become without their aid more profitable than the trade in African subjects. The government of the United States, with its present feelings and antipathies, should not be allowed to hold sway or rule anywhere beyond her present limits, particularly where the contest for power is between her and the British Government. All the governments bordering on the limits of the United States, in fact, all on this continent recognize the equality of man, though in some but prospectively possessed. The United States is the Russia of this continent, and her policy is, and ultimately will be found to be as detrimental to the interest of the less powerful, though independent and free people, as Russia's now is to those in Europe. At the time of the revolution with the Spanish colonies on this continent, the United States, then far less powerful than now, entirely checked the spirit of freedom and revolution, and prevented the accomplishment of the scheme then on foot, which would long since have freed the continent, doing at one blow more injury than her existence has ever done good.

But our hopes that the next revolution will be successful, is in the British Government, of which a large proportion are blacks. And the numbers should be increased by accessions from the free as well as the slave states.

An Africo-American.

New York, Jan. 15th, 1855.

REMARKS.

We want no better evidence of the advantage of Emigration to British America of the colored people of the States, than the above letter. It is very clear that Africo American and the class he represents—the thinking portion of his people—have not as yet a clear idea of the philosophy of the British Government with respect to its subjects.

The thoroughly pro-slavery idea that whatever is done for the colored people of America must be done by colored people alone, as colored British subjects, colored American citizens, by corps of colored scientific men, colored adventurers or as a colored class at home, more seriously affects the success of any proper measures for their benefit—because carrying out directly the policy of their enemies—than all the efforts made in the right direction can do in their favor.

But how can Africo American be free from the taint of Americanism, though sincere in his views, surrounded as he is by American influences, wading in that stagnant pool that so many of his brethren contend about with all the virulence of men fighting for solid ground? Talk about what the British Government should do! Pray think a moment, Mr. American, before publishing before all Israel and the sun, what the British Government should do, else the British people might think, as said Randolph, "you understand our 'tick ticks' doubtless, Mr. American, but you do not our 'tactics'". While agreeing that men have the right to talk, write, publish, and what not, we are pained to see sensible men led away contrary to their better judgment, into an expression of the most palpable contradictions, simply from the force of a position that they can change at any moment by changing their ground. Were Africo American to take a British stand point instead of a Yankee one, he might see the absurdity of attempting for Africa by a handful of colored settlers as missionaries or what not; what in the present march of civilisation, white and colored people combined have failed to accomplish, though supported and sustained by the most powerful governments. At least he would not "calculate" the profits of a corps of colored scientific men, before being quite sure he could raise such a body.

We perfectly agree with the writer, that British sway should predominate on this continent, but by no means can we coincide in its implied supremacy merely because a large number of British subjects in America are colored, or because colored men only have wrongs; wherever slavery exists we find white men having good grounds of complaint, but wherever British supremacy is acknowledged colored men, as well as white, have their rights—these to our minds are good reasons for wishing success to and laboring for British dominance in America, Africa, and wherever the genius of liberty may lead her; but this distinct African or colored nationality scheme we hope may be scouted, by every class, as puerile and impracticable.

SHAKESPEARE.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—In the Freeman of the 20th date, we have a communication which is headed "Emigration." If I had been the author, I should have headed it "SUBMISSION!" for the contrast is so great between his subject and argument, that it loses much of the weight which it should have, to support an old condemned principle, under a new phase. In many instances, men who undertake to defend preconceived ideas and notions, have more weight and influence than their position or their vindication merits. I am sorry to know that such is the present case; for it is lamentable that an individual, possessing the talents, genius, and general intelligence of Mr. J. I. Gaines, should be found wasting them in such a cause—namely, A submission of the Colored People of the United States to American Despotism. Mr. Gaines has boldly accused those who favor Emigration, as probably you are aware of looking at the picture in a one-sided manner, both publicly and privately; and his article proves to an undeniable conclusion by its motto; yea, by its author's frank confession he stands to his eyes plunged into the horrible dilemma, which he has warned some to beware of.

Pardon, reader, we will not call for consistency, just here. And he has further publicly and privately charged that Emigrationists were cowards, and would not meet an opponent on the question. I am happy to know and inform you that it has been tested and proven to the public a misrepresentation. His wholesale charges and challenges were accepted by the Rev. A. R. Green, on the proposition,—That the moral, Civil, Religious and Political Elevation of the Colored Race of the United States, would be most speedily secured by an Emigration to British America. It being the position which has been advocated by the Emigrationist all the time, yet he peremptorily refused to take an issue with him. Thus you see the taunts thrown out by Jenkins, one of our friend's abettors in Douglass' Paper, has proven nothing but ebullitions, emanating from an excited imagination. Our friend Gaines has been, and is acknowledged to be, the most ultra anti-emigrationist in the West, and also the most talented one; and since he has acknowledged our position, or proposition, by stating he did not deny, and believed it, it would be inconsistent for him to take an issue on a proposition which he believed was the fact. As emigrationists, we conceive our point is gained; the cockatrice has been handled in his den, and has proved harmless; thus far. He says, in the first place: I remark there is no prejudice against color. Color points out the object of condition. —of contempt. I would here digress again. During the evening of an expected debate, between himself and Rev. A. R. Green, we were trying till after eleven o'clock at night, I believe, to narrow down, lengthen, and expound the proposition until it was the proper size, to contain enough of his position for him to deliver a vindication of the principle of submission, during which time we had a large waiting audience of ladies and gentlemen, but it was of no avail. On several occasions of the meeting he often arose and retorted to facts which were hard for him to acknowledge; and, on one occasion, I understood him to affirm, that a colored man can rise, here to the highest position,—here, in Cincinnati!—to which I respectfully demur. He further stated that Cincinnati could boast of colored wholesale grocery establishments, coal merchants, furniture makers, &c. Do these men that he brings before the public and himself, exhibit in any degree the social condition of the masses? The grocer cannot have that assistance from his brethren which is necessary to insure him success in it. Why? From that inveterate northern prejudice of color the great mass of the colored family cannot follow those avocations which ensure prosperity and independence. And those who are in such positions are not acknowledged by the whites on terms of social and civil equality. He cannot name an instance where such have been socially acknowledged by the white family in the same circumstances. Why is it not the case? Prejudice against color.

Again, in the south, there are men of color possessing wealth equal to nine-tenths of the community in which they reside, and their condition is as honorable, as far as wealth is concerned, as man can wish, or heart desire; for many of them cannot trace their lineage to slavery; yet they are deprived of every principle of manhood there, and those in the most affluent circumstances have to bear more social and personal oppression from the foul demon of prejudice against color than many of their fellows not so well provided with the necessaries of life, because they fear being divested of their wealth, in case they should repudiate their many wrongs, and seek redress which civil laws should guarantee to them. I knew a free man of color, whose wealth is taxed for about $40,000, who feared to sue a white man for a just debt; and the application to the northern States is keener and deeper than in the southern States; it is the same from Maine to Louisiana. Here, I forbear. Should you feel disposed to insert this, my first article, to a newspaper, I hope it will not retard the influence and mission of your journal.

Permit me to hope, in conclusion, that my reflections on Mr. G.'s article, if he deigns to read them, will not be displeasing to him, and far from making him my enemy. In many things, I am a great admirer of him, and would he weild his influence and pen for what will promote our welfare and elevation, in time he would second no statesman.

Yours, respectfully,

SAMUEL A. S. LOWERY.

Arrival of the "Asia."

HALIFAX, Feb. 14.

The royal mail steamer Asia, Capt. Lott, arrived here, en route for Boston, at an early hour this a. m. She left Liverpool on Saturday the 3rd instant.

Her advices are one week later than those by the Atlantic.

Polical news is of a highly important character, as was predicted at the departure of the Atlantic.

The resignation of Lord John Russell was followed by that of the entire Aberdeen Ministry, and up to the latest moment no new Cabinet had been constructed.

Lord Derby had been invited by Her Majesty to form a new ministry, but his efforts had been unsuccessful.

Affairs in the Crimea remain in exactly the same condition as last reported, and there had been no fighting of importance.

Germanic relations were in as complicated a condition as ever, indeed new difficulties were daily springing up.

Details of the Asia's News.

LATEST.

In Parliament the bill to give effect to the Reciprocity Treaty was read a second time.

The English fleet is ordered to assemble in the Downs, ready for sea, the first week in March. Rumour says Admirals Seymour and Martin will command.

Prussia and the Negotiation.

Prussia is preparing for action. An important despatch, dated Berlin, 21st ultimo, says the Prussian Government has ordered the immediate mobilization of her army, and the 48th and 68th corps were ordered to occupy the provinces of Saxony and Schleswig.

A Prussian despatch, dated January 2nd, addressed to the Cabinets of London and Paris, states that the result of the last conference at Vienna harmonizes with the views of Prussia.

Prussia is not informed of the tenor of the preceding deliberations. She regards the admission of a Prussian representative to the Vienna conference as indispensable to her accession to the treaty.

The demand of France that a portion of the French army be allowed to pass through the Prussian territory was catagorically refused.

The Siege.

SEBASTOPOL, Jan. 10.

It is understood in camp that considerable deviations will be made from the original plans of attack, with a view of taking important points of defence in the flank of the reserve. Two divisions of the French army will immediately leave their camps on the British left and take up a new position on the right. The object is partially to stop supplies from reaching Sebastopol by the new road which the Russians have made from Inkermann.

The galvanic apparatus for exploding twenty tons of powder against the sunken ships at Sebastopol has arrived at Balaklava. It is expected the explosion would damage the foundation of Forts Constantine and Alexander.

The Danube.

Large bodies of Russians are again concentrating in Reni, and Said Pacha has proceeded with all his available troops to that point.

The Russians made a reconnoisance from Fort Tultscha on the 10th and 11th, between the Salina mouths of the Danube, and some skirmishing occurred.

The St. Petersburgh "Journal" gives an official account of the recent crossing of the Danube, and describes it as a reconnoitering force. Letters, however, say it was really an advance of the whole Russian army, which was stopped by the orders of the Russian Ambassador at Vienna. The Russians now occupy their previous position.

The new Russian defences of Odessa are completed, mounting 110 guns.

The fortifications of Anapa, Kaffa, Keilsh, and Sugakpali are being strengthened.

The death of Judge Panet, and the retirement of Judge Rolland has created two vacancies on the Bench. Mr. Morin has been appointed to the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. Mr. Panet, and it is expected that either Drummond or Badgley, will be appointed in the Hon. Mr. Rolland's place. The Hon. Jean Chabot, Commissioner of Public Works, and the Hon J. P. Chauveau, Provincial Secretary, have retired from the Cabinet. Joseph Cauchon, Esq., M. P., for the County of Montmorencie, has been appointed Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands, in room of the Hon. Mr. Morin. Francois Lemieux, Esq., M. P., for the County of Levis, has been appointed Chief Commissioner of Public Works, in room of the Hon. Mr. Chabot; and George Etienne Cartier, Esq., M. P., for the County of Vercheres, Provincial Secretary, in room of the Hon. Mr. Chauveau.

THE HIGHER LAW.—The first law of Congress for restoring fugitive slaves required it should be proved to the satisfaction of the magistrate, that the person brought before him belonged to the claimant. Soon after it was passed, as tradition says, one was brought before Judge Harrington of Vermont, an abundance of proof produced, and a certificate asked for. "Your proof does not satisfy me," said the Judge. "Not satisfy your honor!" exclaimed the claimant, "what then will satisfy you?" "Nothing short of a bill of sale from God Almighty," replied the Judge.—This was just after the revolution.

Preserving Butter.

Take two quarts of the best common salt, one ounce of sugar, and one ounce of common saltpetre; take one ounce of this composition for one pound of butter, work it well into the mass, and close it up for use.

The butter cured with this mixture appears of a rich marrowy consistency and fine color, and never acquires a brittle hardness nor tastes salty.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16*TH VIC. CAP.* 85.. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bottled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,

F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty, imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be constructed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counseling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.
By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.
By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.
By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.
By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 25 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ TO EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

Poetry.

From Putnam's Magazine.

TWO LITTLE STARS.

Two little stars, at eventide,
Rose in the azure, side by side,
And 'mid the glittering orbs on high,
Floated serenely through the sky.
They sparkled with a trembling ray,
But rovingly pursued their way,
Though others blazed more brilliant far than they!

The night stole on—but with it came
A sweeping storm, in mist and flame,
Which hung with gloom the starry dome,
And lashed the billows into foam,
While like a phantom, stern and stark,
Stretching its thin arms in the dark,
Through the wild chaos tossed my trembling bark!

The night wore on—the angry blast
Had spent its fury, and was past,
And gentle zephyrs wooed to rest
The troubled ocean's heaving breast,
When, far above, amid the blue,
As one by one the clouds withdrew,
Those little loving stars came beaming through!

And on they went, with rising force,
Up to the zenith of their course,
Till in the Orient's rosy light
Melted the shadows of the night;
And then, with undiminished ray,
Still side by side, they stole away,
Lost in the glory of the coming day!

Thus, dearest, onward, side by side,
Through youth, the spirit's eventide,
Up to the night of Life have we Humbly fulfilled our destiny;
And though around the rich and great
Are glittering in far loftier state,
Contentedly we share our lowlier fate!

And thus, though storms may come and go,
Shrouding with gloom the world below,
Above the tumult, as we rise,
In calm communion with the skies,
Still be it ours, serenely bright,
To bless the darkness of the night,
Cheering the tempest-toss'd with heavenly light!

And when, at length, each end attained,
The zenith of our course is gained—
As side by side those stars withdrew,
Still riding in the brightening blue,
Still beaming with unbroken ray—
As gently may we glide away,
In the effulgence of immortal day!

Image-Worship.

Unlettered man is not the only idolator. Even in our own well-taught community, mechanical as its spirit is thought to be, we find images set up and worshipped, infinitely more fantastic than any of those erected in joss-house or temple. Yonder barrister passing down Chancery lane in gown and wig, smart and practical, repudiative of poets and artists, thinks himself the very essence of sober worldliness. Institute a search into the contents of his busy brain, and you find an idol perched there—a religion to him, should he have no other. This idol is an embodiment of the idea predominant in his mind—that of the position of chancellor, to his conception the highest dignity on earth. To this, at every interval of occupation, does he bow down with the most abject adoration; to this tend all his dreams of day and night; a visionary he, even while rising early and sleeping late, engaged in a pursuit demanding the most plodding industry, advancing step by step in the confidence of the attorneys, and quietly, steadily 'biding his time.' Not less is the toiling merchant filled with a shrine and an idol adapted to the worship of his inner man. With him it is the idea of some fine old firm, the name of which moves markets, and thrills through the nervous system of banks, with a prestige there is no resisting. Deep in bales and ledger-figures are his hands and eyes: no time does he seem to spare for any but the most mechanical details of his calling; yet, all the while, there is a worship going on within, loud with praise and aspiration as any that ever filled a church.

There are images, too, set up in strange, out-world places, which have other but equally abiding influences on their devout worshipper. Those who follow the 'pomp and circumstances of war' have their peculiar idol. The soldier moulds it out of the clay ploughed up by his horse's hoofs on fields heaped with the dead and dying; he hews its laurel crown with his burnished sword, as the Druids of old did the sacred mistletoe with a golden sickle; he drapes it with banners wrung from the powerless hand of the enemy; and at the close of the fight, bows down before it in the light of the waning watch-fires, invoking it by the proud names of Fame and Glory. Patient is he, for its sake, of toil and hardship—the shivering night-bivouac; the lengthy, struggling march over hostile ground, beset by horrible phantoms in a thousand shapes; exhaustion, thirst, and hunger, surprises, ambuscades, home-sickness, pestilence, and death. The sailor has a twin-deity to this. Standing at his gun, he feels it nerve his arm, strengthening the dauntless metal within his hardy frame; or, rising up before him on his lonely night-watch from the crest of some monster billow, it grants him sweet visions of one more alien flag planted by his hand in the old Greenwich Hall. He pictures not the wrecked and maimed figure—crushed, limbless, halt, bowed, and decrepit—above which those folds float in the welcome day of his far-seen triumph; he sees nothing but the waving ensign, bought with his best blood, and presented to his country in exchange for a little hard gold, and some equally hard salt-beef and weevilly biscuit. And where, O ye Cynics, who float at glory!—where, without such idols, moulded and framed out of the best metal of the land—where were your boasted birthright of liberty; your citizen-rights; your uninvaded pastures, eloquent with the peaceful sound of Sabbath bells? Where your swelling fatherland pride, your lofty patriotism, your ignorance of the knout, and ignorance of the bastinado?

The would-be discoverer of lands hitherto unknown, has also his mere mortal deity. He too, like the soldier and the sailor, has a shrine for his special worship; he, too, prostrates himself before the goddess Renown. In his case, the blindness of devotion is equal to its fervour. For the sake of some possible after-day's memory in the minds of his fellow-men—the graven image in his soul—he is content to take the chances of perishing by a fate which has little or nothing of the heroic. His cherished idea is that of giving some new piece of ground to the future geographer, to be marked, perhaps by, his own name. In this 'forlorn hope' he goes forth to die on some inhospitable shore, the cruel savage for his fieldmate, and the barren, unproductive earth for his last housing-place. The renown he looked for becomes all summed up in a vague suspicion that he may have perished where no living eye, save that of the frozen bear or the scared eagle, beheld either his sufferings or his sacrifice. All, possibly, that will ever be known of him is, that wherever he disappeared, a relic shall be found in the hands of a bewildered savage—a love-token, hoarded for years, and religiously borne with him even to the desert's brink, to be at last hung round an Esquimaux's neck! Or, it may be, a coin useless to procure food where food was none, serving to deck some squatter in the snow: or some article of household use or custom, bearing its engraved heraldic motto: a legend conveying no meaning to the untaught being in whose hands it lies, a curious enigma which countless ages could never solve for him in his benighted ignorance, but strangely beautiful and touching in its old plain simplicity to those forlorn ones who may one day, by some inexplicable chance, recover the lost relic, repeating its well-known inscription of him who is no more—Spero meliora!

Perhaps the most worthless and ungodlike of all the images set up by man, is the idol moulded by the grasping hand of the miser. Can anything be more humiliating to poor human nature, than the sight of a shrunk and time-wrinkled visage, gazing up in adoration at a lumpish divinity in the form of a huge unwieldy money-bag? Surely it is the very dry skeleton of ambition than can see itself in a winding-sheet of bank-paper, or find a joy in the idea of lying muffled in the grave amid a useless pile of gold-dust. Yet, strange as it may seem, for such an end do some men 'scorn delights and live laborious days,' hugging the burnished idol, pursuing the mystic shadow of a good, on the substance of which the man of ordinary reason cannot lay so much as a finger! Nothing comes up to the miser's greed in the mere force of absurdity. The maniac's hallucinations weigh light in the balance. There is something, though frightful, almost sublime in the fervour with which the poor lunatic bows down before the god of his idolatry; or rather, we should say, stands erect in its ideal presence. Even when most abject in his worship, he will tell you in excuse that the throned deity that claimed the homage of his knee 'the likeness of a kingly crown had on.' He himself grows regal as he looks on it; the 'majesty of Denmark' is as nothing to the dignity which lifts him above earth, and gives to his iron tread the march of a monarch after victory! The greatness which is his idol, and in the presence and worship of which his mind has given way, hangs round him like the true imperial purple. Haply he has passed out from the poor debtor's prison, spirit-broken and abashed, to tread the floors of Bethehem, the self-elected ruler over countless millions of crouching slaves. Wo to the misguided subject who shall dare to approach his august presence, and not lick the dust beneath his feet! In his rich poverty—in his sublime, threadbare grandeur—in his moneyless wealth—in his sad, perilous, but lofty aspirations—is he not a king? Ay, every inch a king!

And so, like the valiant Crusaders of old time, we each and all alike journey towards some cherished altar-ground of our hope—some distant and visionary Salem of our souls. Earnest and eager, we spur onward, full of such vivid aspiration, such devout longing, as is needful to carry us across the desert that must intervene between us and the immaculate shrine of our chosen ideal. The spirit of enterprise within us is the true dragon-slayer: our crusade is against the infidel—Despair. Beheld through the softening medium of distance, hope, and a great courage, glorious appears the struggle, and sanctified the end. Yet all our gain in the issue may prove but the tomb of a lost or disappointed ambition—an empty and barren sepulchre. So be it; the pursuit is all. Still let but our ambition be a worthy one; and the more earnest, the more self-denying, the more unflagging, are our endeavors to attain to the object of it, the wiser shall we grow, and the better able shall we be to sustain defeat, or to use our victory as become us. Better than an exististence that stagnates without aim or design, is the stir and turmoil of the world's most crowded path; better the dangers of the wild-boar hunt, than the slothful office of the swineherd. To be a sage, a hero, or a martyr, we must have an object to live for, or a cause for which to die.

PROFANE LANGUAGE.—It is related by Dr. Scudder, that on his return from his mission in India, after a long absence, he was standing on the deck of a steamer, with his son, a youth, when he heard a gentleman using loud and profane language. "See friend," said the doctor, accosting the stranger, "this boy—my son—was born and brought up in a heathen country and a land of Pagan idolatry, but in all his life, he never heard a man blaspheme his Maker until now." The man colored, blurted out an apology, and looked not a little ashamed of himself. If there is any custom more silly than duelling, it is that of using profane language; but it is as common as lying, and there is hardly a dirty-nosed urchin in the street that will not swear as bravely as any "gentleman" that walks Broadway.

Miscellaneous.

LIVING BY ONE'S WITS.

FROM THE GERMAN.

Nine persons sailed from Basle, down the Rhine. A Jew, who wished to go to Shalampi, was allowed to come on board and journey with them, on condition that he would conduct himself with propriety, and give the captain eighteen kreutzers for his passage.

Now it is true something jingled in the Jew's pocket when he struck his hand against it; but the only money there was therein, was a twelve kreutzer piece, for the other was a brass button. Notwithstanding this, he accepted the offer with gratitude. For he thought to himself, "Something may be earned, even upon the water. There is many a man who has grown rich upon the Rhine."

During the first part of the voyage the passengers were very talkative and merry, and the Jew, with his wallet under his arm, for he did not lay it aside, was the object of much mirth and mockery, as, alas! is often the case with those of his nation. But as the vessel sailed onward, and passed Thuringen and Saint Veit, the passengers, one after the other grew silent, and gazed down the river until one cried:

"Come, Jew, do you not know any pastime that will amuse us? Your fathers must have contrived many a one during their long stay in the wilderness."

"Now is the time," thought the Jew, "to shear my sheep." And he proposed that they should sit round in a circle, and propound very curious questions to each other, and he, with their permission would sit with them. Those who could not answer the questions, should pay the one who proponded them a twelve kreutzer piece, and those who answered them pertinently, should receive a twelve kreutzer piece.

The proposal pleased the company; and hoping to divert themselves with the Jew's wit or stupidity, each one asked, at random, whatever entered his head.

Thus, for example, the first one asked—"How many soft boiled eggs could the giant Goliah eat upon an empty stomach?"

All said it was impossible to answer that question, and each paid his twelve kreutzers.

But the Jew said, "One; for he who has eaten an egg, cannot eat a second upon an empty stomach," and the others paid him twelve kreutzers.

The second thought, "Wait, Jew, I will try you out of the New Testament, and I think I shall win my piece. Why did the Apostle Paul write the second Epistle to the Corinthians?"

The Jew said—"Because he was not in Corinth, otherwise he would have spoken to them." So he won another twelve kreutzer piece.

When the third saw that the Jew was so well versed in the Bible, he tried him in a different way.

"Who prolongs his work to as great a length as possible, and still completes it in time?"

"The ropemaker, if he is industrious," said the Jew.

In the meanewhile they drew near to a village, and one said to the other.

"That is Bamlach."

Then the fourth asked,

"In what month do the people of Bamlach eat the least?"

The Jew said, "In February, for that has only twenty-eight days."

The fifth said—"There are two natural brothers, and still only one of them is my uncle."

The Jew said—"The uncle is your father's brother, and your father is not your uncle."

A fish now jumped out of the water, and the sixth asked.

"What fish have their eyes nearest together?"

The Jew said—"The smallest."

"How can a man ride from Basle to Bern in the shade, in the summer time, when the sun shines?"

The Jew said—"When he comes to a place where there is no shade, he must dismount and go on foot."

The eighth asked,

"When a man rides in the winter time from Bern to Basle, and has forgotten his gloves, how must he manage so that his hands shall not freeze?"

The Jew said—"He must make fists out of them."

The ninth was the last. This one asked,

"How can five persons divide five eggs, so that each man shall receive one, and still one remain in the dish?"

The Jew said—"The last must take the dish with the egg, and he can let it lie there as long as he pleases."

But now it came to his turn, and he determined to make a good sweep. After many preliminary compliments, he asked, with an air of mischievious friendliness,

"How can a man fry two trouts in three pans so that a trout may lie in each pan?"

No one could answer this, and one after the other gave him a twelve kreutzer piece. But when the ninth desired that he should answer it himself, he frankly acknowledged that he knew not how the trout could be fried in such a way.

Then was it maintained that this was unfair in the Jew; but he stoutly affirmed that there was no provision for it in the agreement, save that he who could not answer the question should pay the kreutzers, and he fulfilled the agreement by paying that sum to the ninth of his comrades who had asked him to solve it himself. But they all being rich merchants, and grateful for the amusement which had passed an hour or two very pleasantly for them—laughed heartily over their loss, and at the Jew's cunning.

Now, as it will be no difficult matter to compute what the Jew gained, we leave this for the reader to do, merely putting them in mind that the price of his passage was eighteen kreutzers.

Job and his Troubles.

It was Shakespeare who said—"when sorrows come, they come nor single spies but in battalions," and the Patriarch Job was a fair exemplification of it. Some must be cruel only to be kind.

Job obtained redress for all his sufferings before he died. Although kindly advised by his friends to take up arms against a sea of troubles, and by opposing them, he refused and lived through an ocean of difficulties. In these uncouth times there are many who ought to imitate Job in patience and perseverance. Job's sorrows, the result of Satan's calumny, came upon him astoundingly rapid. The greatest of all the men of the east in worldly possessions and in integrity was envied and slandered by the devil. The great are even envied and very frequently victimized by the low cunning Satans who go to and fro in the earth, and walk up and down in it. While Job was in the height of domestic bliss and worldly prosperity, the devil had so worked upon the author of all happiness that he was permitted to afflict the most upright man that the world had known. Job's asses, his oxen, his servants, his sheep, his camels, and indeed everything that was his was slain and carried away by the Chaldeans in a night. And not only that, a great wind came, and smiting the four corners of the house, fell upon his young men and they were dead. Job was literally naked as when born—without possessions, without family, and, as is in such circumstances ever the case, without many real friends. And with this distressing state of things the devil was not content. Job was smitten with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown. He sat down among the ashes, and his wife advised him to curse the supposed cause of his troubles and die. That Job would not do, but he regretted that he had been born—the thing which he had greatly feared had come upon him. His sufferings were augmented by unjust suspicions and reflections. Job's afflictions were attributed by Elephaz to unworthiness and irreligion—he was alleged by the demanite to be a fool whose substance the robber had swallowed up,—Job mildly replying, although affliction cometh not out of the ground, man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward. Job trusted for succour, knowing that there is a power which taketh the cunning in their own craftiness and which protecteth the poor from the mighty. But he was not without complaint. Bitterly did he complain of his own restlessness, wish for death, and denounce the hypocrite whose hope was to perish—"the congregations of hypocrites shall consume the tabernacles of bribery;" "they conceive mischief and bring forth vanity, and their belly prepareth deceit." He considered his days past, his purpose broken off, and even the thoughts of his heart—"as for my hope where shall I see it?" Ten times was he reproached by his friends, when Elihu came to the rescue saying great men are not always wise, nor the aged judicious, and that affliction was all for the best. At last the workings of Providence were directly revealed to Job, who humbled himself. His "friends" were made to beg his pardon; and Job relieved from his afflictions, obtained twice as much as he had before. Then came all his brethren, and all his sisters and all that they had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house, bemoaned, and comforted him, every man giving him a piece of money and every one an earring of gold. He obtained a new stock of cattle and he had sons and daughters who were the bravest and the finest of the land.

The book of Job is the most admired of any in the Bible. It is so correct a picture of man's position in prosperity and in adversity. The reasoning is so beautiful, the aspiration so sublime, the precepts so ennobling, the language so eloquent, the truth so transparent that it cannot be read without advantage, even by the infidel. In the whole book there is nothing doubtful by reason of obscurity. Every passage is either simple and clear or grand and striking. The majesty and the misery of a past age are vividly exhibited, and we are led to the conclusions, that Solomon was correct in saying—"there is nothing new under the Sun." How many are there who have been literally cast upon the dunghill through the treachery, the misrepresentations, and hypocrisy of others, and how few have survived such treachery, and been restored to former acquaintances, ready to reward those who need it not and whom, in trouble, they know not? Let the world judge. It seems to us as if Job had been the editor of a daily newspaper,—who seemed to think it would be sufficient punishment for his enemy to write a book; and in that book of Job, allusions, we are told, is made to the electric telegraph—"canst thou send lightnings hither and thither to say "here am I"—and to steamships in the great leviathan to be played as a bird, to be parted among the merchants, out of whose mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out, and who maketh the deep boil like a pot—and to the locomotive in the Behemoth the chief of ways who pierceth through snares and drinketh up Jordan at a draught. Troubles a daily editor doubtless has, but when these are added to by treachery, hypocrisy, and calumny it is almost enough to make a saint take up arms against a sea of troubles, and by opposing end them. —Quebec Observer.

Phosphorus.

It is now just two hundred years since phosphorus was first obtained by Brand, of Hamburgh. So wonderful was the discovery then considered, that Kraft, an eminent philosopher of the day, gave Brand three hundred dollars for the secret of its preparation. Kraft then travelled, and visited nearly all the courts of Europe, exhibiting phosphorus to kings and nobles. In appearance, phosphorus resembles bees' wax; but it is more transparent, approaching to the coast of amber. Its name, which is derived from the Greek, signifies "light-bearer," and is indicative of its most distinguishing quality, being self-luminous. Phosphorus, when exposed to the air, shines like a star, giving out a beautiful lambent greenish light. Phosphorus dissolves in warm sweet oil. If this phosphorized oil be rubbed over the face in the dark, the features assume a ghastly appearance, and the experimentallist looks like a veritable living Will-o'-the-Wisp. The origin of phosphorus is the most remarkable thing concerning it. Every other substance with which we are acquainted can be traced either to the earth or air; but phosphorus seems to be of animal origin. Of all animals, man contains the most; and of the various parts of the body, the brain yields by analysis more phosphorus than any other. This fact is of no little moment. Every thought has perhaps a phosphoric source. It is certain that the most intellectual beings contain the most phosphorus. It generally happens that when a singular discovery is made, many years elapse before any application of it is made to the welfare and happiness of man. This remark applies to phosphorus. It is only the other day that it was sold at five shillings an ounce; now it is so cheap that the penniless portion of our population hawk it about in the form of matches. But what a noble, life, light, and fire-giving office does it fill! For commercial purposes—match-making—phosphorus is extracted from burnt bones. The demand for it is now so great, that many tons are annually prepared. When Kraft travelled, he had not more than half an ounce to set before the king!"

Tobacco in the Cars.

We need a second car for tobacco-chewers and spitters. Whilst our sires and sons are tilting about the country continually, we take one or two journeys a year. These, with us, are great events. Our trunks and carpet-bags are polished up, and a new dress is generally bought for the occasion. All excitement with the preparations and anticipations, we enter the cars. What is it that smells so? What is this slimy, slippery stuff, on the floor? What are these men doing? Are they sick at the stomach—are they all afflicted with the water-brash? Their lips are brown—a dark juice runs form the sides of their mouths. How queer they talk. They utter one sentence, then turn and spit out another, as if every alternate idea was a refuse one, unworthy of utterance. We hasten on—pass through car after car, to find a decent spot, and clean people; but in vain. So, in despair, we take a seat anywhere, elevate our feet, tuck up our skirts, and there sit, like a bird on perch, in continual fear lest our clothes may touch the muddy pool below. But who can sit curled up all day? We must come down at last. Nature will stand up and stretch herself.

On my last journey, a well-dressed man, seemingly a gentleman, squirted a stream of tobacco juice on my dress, three times. He sat looking out of the window, admiring, perhaps, the Catskill mountains, or thinking of some great questions of the day—of Free Trade, or the annexation of the Sandwich Islands. I hated to bring him down from from such heights, to my Tweed travelling dress, but the last squirt was too much. "Sir," said I, pointing to my dress, "will you be kind enough to squirt your tobacco juice in another direction." He blushed to the eyes, and did not spit on me again for the rest of the journey, which, of course, I considered an act of great kindness and forbearance on his part.—Mrs. Stanton's "Letters to Railroad Directors."

FALL OF MONT BLANC.—The Echo du Mont Blanc publishes the following from a correspondent:—"At 6 o'clock p. m., of the 26th ult., the summit of the mountain between the village of Magland and La Perriere gave way, and fell with a frightful crash. The commotion caused all the houses of the village to shake for more than two minutes; we thought that we were about to be swallowed up by an earthquake. When things became somewhat calm, I saw a mass of stone, sand, and earth, surmounted by a cloud of dust, filling all the valley; and stone, earth and sand continued to fall for seven minutes. From time to time the fall recommenced, but with less noise. The first fall shook all the houses on the other side of the Arve, but it appears that no one was injured. Nearly all the trees in a wood have been broken down. The road and the marsh which are between the river and the mountain are covered for a length of upwards of 100 yards, and a width of about 26, with stones of all sizes and with earth to a depth of more than ten feet. It is calculated that the fall took place from near the village of Perhabs, at a height of about 507 feet. There is a probability that a further fall will take place, but it is not likely to endanger the village of Magland."

PORT WINE.—From an official return of the quantity of port wine shipped from Portugal during the year 1854 we copy the following statement: "To Great Britain, 33,831 pipes, against 46,834 in 1853; Brazil, 1,274; Canada, 952; Hamburg, 814; Australia, 639, against 2,521 1853; Sweden, 444; Denmark, 426; United States, 326; Portuguese possessions, 245; Newfoundland, 182; Bremen, 64; Prussia, 30; France, 15; Holland, 10." It thus appears, that of the large quantity of stuff sold here as port wine, only 326 pipes came direct from the country where alone the genuine article is procured.

Free Labor.

The more we dwell upon the varied and extended significance of this term, the more truthfully and completely it seems to define and comprehend the ideas and sentiments embraced and represented in the anti-slavery movement.

To chattelize man for his labor has been the great temptation and incentive to the wicked cupidity of his fellow. To obtain his toil without compensation is the motive which has rifled Africa of myriads of human beings, and perpetrated the horrors of the "middle passage." Were it not for this single object, slavery could not exist for a moment. To emancipate, to free labor, involves all that is embraced in the abolition of slavery. It expresses more than this to our mind. It puts forth a grand idea, intelligible to all the millions of the human race who earn their bread by the sweat of the brow. Labor—patient, persevering, self-rewarding, hopeful and true—is, we believe, one of the crown dignities of humanity.

If it be true, that one of the elements of the air we breathe is so vital to our existence, that we could not live an hour should it be withdrawn or tainted, it is equally true that manual labor is as vital an element of the prosperity of any community. Slavery is the most unmitigated and degrading indignity that can be inflicted on labor. It is more than a wrong, more than a cruelty; for the victims of mere wrong and cruelty often command the honor and respect, as well as sympathy of manhind. But slavery degrades, abases labor to the condition of the brute beast of burden; hence, in the countries in which it exists, every occupation involving labor is smutched with a shade of shame; hence, those born in such countries to the necessity of labor, if they have any feeling of self-respect beating in their bosoms, are forced to flee beyond the limits of the curse. But if this eclipse be total over the land of bondage, it is partial everywhere. No one may say how the estimation in which labor was held in the freest country in the world has been affected by the existence of slavery. No one may say by how many or by how few links of association the most industrious and virtuous artisan in New England or Old England is connected with the condition of the slave in the rice-fields of Carolina. No one may say how insidiously and widely the idea is working its way into the political and industrial economies of the freest nations, that the condition of slavery must, somehow, be accepted as the base line, the point of departure of their operations; that, somehow, it must determine the compensation and the honor of labor. Hence, we hear on all sides a great deal about the introduction of Coolies, or Chinese, into the different slave States, as a substitute for the enslaved Africans. But what fits them for substitutes? Why, chiefly, their capacity to live on a penny worth of rice per day; their willingness, perhaps, to work for sixpence from sun to sun. Put this and that together in the popular ratiocination of this political economy, and they mean this; if ever free labor shall cultivate the cotton, rice, or corn-fields of the south, it shall be brought down as near to the lowest level of slavery as possible, in the matter of compensation. Is that all? No! it shall be brought down as near to the level of slavery in the quality of dignity as in that of compensation itself. Slavery is to measure and determine both. Slavery is to be the base line, on which the economist is to plant one foot of his compass, and, with the other, step off a thin parallel on which free men may work for sixpence a-day, and live on raw turnips or a handful of rice. We earnestly hope that the working men of every free country will awake to the importance of this subject; that they will see the bearing of slavery upon their own condition; then will they perceive the length and breadth of the meaning of Free Labor. Under this banner will they rally, with sympathies and interests that beat and throb with all that is precious in their early hopes and well-being.—Burritt's Bond of Brotherhood.

THE MONTMORENCI CONE is already of great magnitude, and worthy of a visit, especially from the stranger who has not yet witnessed this extraordinary phenomenon of nature. The roads are in excellent order, the sliding good, and the ascent to the very summit of the higher cone is rendered facile by a flight of stairs cut in the ice. The hotel below the cliff has been renovated and newly furnished throughout, by its present proprietor, Mr. Hickey, whom pic-nic-ers will find ready at all times to provide the best accommodation that can be desired.—Quebec Mercury.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LONDON, Feb. 16, 1855.

Parliament re-assembled to-day, after its brief adjournment.

General Simpson's Mission to the Crimea.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH directed the attention of the Secretary of State for War to a pledge which had been given by the late Government, to award a clasp to the troops which had fought at Balaklava, a medal to the seamen who had manned the batteries in front of Sebastopol, and an honorary order of merit to be attainable by men of all ranks. He hoped that in these respects the present Government would carry out the pledge which had been given by the late Government. Contrasting the relative duties performed by officers of the staff, and officers of the line, he stated that the former were not so exposed to personal danger as the latter, and he suggested that efficient means should be taken to inspect and report the services of regimental officers. He also remarked upon the large number of men who had been killed in the East, when compared with the number of officers, and he attributed this disproportion to the want of conduct on the part of the officers in command. In conclusion, the noble earl bore a high testimony to the soldier-like qualities and ability of General Simpson, who had been recently appointed to the command of the 2nd division in the East.

Lord PANMURE complained of the inconvenience of being called upon to give categorical answers affecting an important department, of which no notice had been given. He concurred, however, in the propriety of conferring those honours which had been suggested, and assured the House no time would be lost in redeeming the pledge of the late Government upon the subject. He took occasion to compliment his predecessor (the Duke of Newcastle) upon the mode in which he had administered the War Department. Much, no doubt, remained to be done; but his noble friend had laid the foundation of an efficient system. He alluded especially to the importance of the land transport service, which had been entirely organized by the Duke of Newcastle. It was his intention to investigate the subject of the distribution of honours, and to see that jus ice was done to the regimental officers. General Simpson had been sent to the East, not to take command of a vacant division, but to inspect the general staff, from the highest to the lowest, and to be, in fact, the chief of the staff, conveying the orders from Lord Raglan to the various heads, and seeing that these orders were promptly and implicitly obeyed. From this appointment he anticipated that both the Adjutant-General and the Quarter-master-General's department would be rendered more efficient than they were at present. The noble lord then laid upon the table a bill to enable her Majesty to accept the services of men in the army for any period less than ten years, which he trusted would enable the army to obtain a better class of recruits. He added, that it was his intention to send out a commission to inquire into the charges which had been made against the Commissariat of the Army; and he was happy to state that Sir John M'Neile would conduct that inquiry.

After a few words from the Earl of Shaftesbury, the subject dropped, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Lord Palmerston, Mr. Sidney Herbert, and Mr. Ricardo took their seats for Tiverton, South Wilts, and Windsor.

A new writ was ordered for the borough of Cardigan in the room of Mr. Loveden, deceased.

The Speaker announced that he had received a letter from Admiral Lyons, enclosing one from Admiral Bruat, acknowledging the thanks of the House to the allied navy in the Black Sea.

Government Measures for Improving affairs in the Crimea.

Lord PALMERSTON stated the circum tances which had led to the late changes in the Ministry, and that the correspondence between Lord Derby and himself, with respect to the formation of a Government had been incorrectly stated by him in the other House. He had declined to take office under Lord Derby, after consulting Lord Lansdowne on the subject, because he did not think, by accepting the proposal, he should give to such a Government the strength which the noble earl seemed to think his acceptance would afford. Her Majesty then sent for Lord John Russell, who had done him the honor of going to him, and he at once said that, feeling impressed with the full importance of the crisis in which the country stood, he was willing to give every assistance in his power, without reserve. But Lord J. Russell having failed, her Majesty, on Sunday evening, had been pleased to send for him (Lord Palmerston), and on Tuesday he was able to report his success in forming an administration. He considered himself happy in having the valuable assistance of Mr. Gladstone and Sir Jas. Graham in his ministry. He hoped, under the present circumstances, the House would not consent to wait the tardy result of Mr. Roebuck's committee. The only ground on which he asked the House to reject it was, that the Government themselves intended to perform the duty which was to be assigned to that committee. The noble lord proceeded to state the intentions of the new Government. The Secretary of the Admiralty had appointed a Board to superintend the transport service. A commission was now going to be sent out to the Crimea, composed of three civilians, who would have ample power to amend the sanitary condition of the hospitals, the camp, and the ships. [Hear, hear.] Many complaints had been made of the system of the Commissariat department; to rectify this a commission was going out, at the head of which Sir John McNeile would be placed. They would examine into their defects, and make the necessary improvements in the Commissariat arrangements. The Quarter-master-General and Adjutant-General's departments would be removed from the authority of Lord Raglan, and placed under Major-General Simpson. An hospital was to be established at Smyrna under civilians solely. Lord Panmure was going to remodel the medical department at home, and he would also present a bill to enable her Majesty to enlist as soldiers men somewhat older than the present limit, and for a shorter period than at present fixed. To faciliate the transport in the Crimea arrangements would immediately be made to collect animals in Asia Minor for the service of the army. Since the present Government had been in office all these things had been done or were doing, and he trusted the House would wait for the result of these improvements before proceeding with the select committee. The duty of a Ministry, however, was to make every effort which could honourably and safely be made for putting an end to the war by a treaty of peace. Austria and Russia had agreed upon the basis upon which negotiations should be commenced, and it was the duty of the British Government to see whether peace could be obtained on just and honourable terms. For this purpose Lord J. Russell would proceed to Vienna early next week; he would pass through Paris for the purpose of consulting the French Government, and through Berlin for the purpose of consulting the Prussian Government. If he failed in his mission, the country would feel that there was no other course to pursue but to go on with the war, and he was convinced that the nation would support with alacrity a Government which, having endeavoured to procure peace and failed, was determined to carry on the war with vigour. They, therefore, threw themselves on the generous support of Parliament and the country, which he was confident they would not have to ask for in vain.

Mr D'ISRAELI defended the course taken by Lord Derby, who, he remarked, had been influenced by only one consideration, and that was, the expediency of procuring, in the present emergency, a powerful Government. Lord Palmerston had, he continued, thought proper to eulogise two members of his Cabinet whose administrative abilities had certainly not been shown by results. The noble lord had better, in his opinion, have been solemnly silent, than to recommend himself to the confidence of Parliament, or the assistance of men who had brought on the country very great, and now universally acknowledged calamities, and who had been censured by the House of Commons. The improvements mentioned by Lord Palmerston, so far from being a reason against the committee proposed by Mr. Roebuck, was a censure upon the late Government, who had so long neglected, what they were informed were necessary and important changes. He urged in support of Mr. Roebuck's committee, that one of the finest armies that had ever left this country had been destroyed, not by the sword of the enemy, but by means so mysterious, that a most experienced statesman had confessed, and announced in the House, that he could not understand it. It was his intention in every way to support the decision of the House. He was in favour of political inquiry into the condition of the army before Sebastopol, and the conduct of the authorities who were entrusted with the arrangements for carrying on the war. The mission of Lord John Russell would meet with the satisfaction of the country, because every one felt that no one who occupied the position of the noble lord would ever consent to terms of peace, which were unworthy of the country, and which would not accomplish that which had compelled us to resort to force of arms; and Mr. D'Israeli assured Lord Palmerston that he would receive the assistance of the country in the prosecution of the war, though the members of the opposition could not offer more assistance than they had given to Lord Aberdeen's Administration. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that although the same individuals held office in a new form, they had changed in a fortnight from continual blunders to extreme excellence.

Mr. RICH reminded the hon. gentleman that the blunderers to whom he had referred were solicited by Lord Derby to become members of a Cabinet formed by him.

Mr. ROEBUCK said that the committee which he intended to move on Thursday next had already been granted by the House, and the only argument urged against it by Lord Palmerston was, that there was a new Administration. They had shuffled the cards, but they had got the same hands. He supposed that their qualities had not changed within the last fortnight, when the House declared that they were unfit to hold office. He should therefore on Thursday next move for the committee, believing that he should be aiding Lord Palmerston in remodelling the institutions of this country, and enforcing energy and vigour into the Administration.

Mr. MUNTZ had supported the motion of Mr. Roebuck when it was first brought forward, and he did not, from the arguments of Lord Palmerston, see any reason to change his opinion.

Some discussion followed, in which Mr. T. Duncombe, Mr. Horsman, Mr. E. Ball, Mr. Phinn, Mr. Liddell, Mr. D'Eyncourt, Admiral Berkeley, and others took part.

Sir C. Napier and Sir J. Graham.

In reply to Captain Duncombe, Sir James Graham said that he could not follow the speech of Admiral Napier at the Mansion-house without betraying despatches and other communications, which would be disadvantageous to the public service, and he preferred submitting to the obloquy which had been thrown upon him by the gallant officer rather than endanger the public service. It was altogether untrue that the fleet under Sir Charles Napier was ill managed and worse disciplined. The only foundation for the statement that he had been deprived of his command was, that he had been called upon, when the service in the Baltic terminated, to lower his flag, for which there were precedents. He recommended her Majesty not to take any notice of the speech at the Manion-house, so that he might not dub himself a martyr as well as a hero.

Composition of the next Baltic Fleet.

The House then went into committee on the Navy Estimates.

Sir J. GRAHAM rose to move two votes, one of £79,000, due on account of the excess of expenditure in the year ending March 1854, and £1,958,000 for excess in the current year ending April 1, 1855. A large proportion of the second vote was spent in the purchase of Italian hemp, sufficient to last one year, which would make the country independent of the Baltic supply. It was determined this year to send out to the Baltic nothing but steam vessels, as they had learned from experience that sail and steam vessels could not be manœuvred together, the commander having to consider both, was baffled in his arrangements. This would increase the expenditure, though he believed it would be found advantageous in the long-run next year. Twenty sail of the line would go to the Baltic, propelled by steam, and there would be an additi m of twenty gun-boats and ten floating batteries. Since he had held office there had been an annual decrease on half-pay of £182,000, and on civil pensions of £1,000. He concluded by stating that, considering the circumstances under which our fleets had been placed, they had not been neglectful of their duty In the Black Sea they were without harbors, and in the Baltic a blockade had been kept up with energy and gallantry without the loss of a single ship.

The several items of Estimates were agreed to, and the House resumed.

The Friendly Societies' Bill was read a second time. The business on the paper was disposed of, and the House adjourned at 45 minutes past 12.

On Friday night, in the House of Commons, Admiral Berekley gave an explicit denial to the statement made by Sir Charles Napier at the Mansion-house dinner. The Admiralty Lord denied that Sir Charles had been censured; that he had been goaded on to any rash enterprise, or that he had on the other hand, been restricted in any way in his operations in the Baltic.

Admiral Berkeley concluded by expressing his regret, that Sir Charles should by indiscretion and intemperance of speech have set so bad an example to the service. In answer to this speech, Sir Charles has written a note to the Times asserting his ability to make good all his statements. We shall soon hear more of this matter. Meanwhile Sir Charles Napier's chance of serving afloat again is very remote.

The Premier.

Amid the impassioned cry of myriads relative to the Premier—a cry in which the still small voice of reason is frequently drowned—it is consolatory to meet with candour, common sense, and discrimination. Of this we find a very gratifying example in the last Number of the Leeds Mercury, which contains the following passage, in the truth of which we entirely concur. But for its appearance, indeed, we were prepared ourselves to indite similar sentiments; but since these representations entirely harmonise with our own convictions, we shall not only save the trouble, but fortify ourselves by citing the opinions of one of the most independent and patriotic Journals of the day. The Mercury proceeds:—

The new Premier has by far the largest official experience of any of our statesmen, and that of a kind directly bearing on foreign policy and war. From 1809 to 1828 he held the office of Secretary at War. Three times has he been Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, namely, from 1830 to 1834, from 1835 to 1841, and from 1846 to 1851. Thus he has spent thirty-six years in the War and Foreign departments, twenty in the former and sixteen in the latter; besides two years in the Home Office. To the experience of age Lord Palmerston adds much of the activity and vigour of youth; for, though past three-score and ten, he has a buoyancy of spirits almost juvenile. The cares of office do not oppress him. Parliamentary opposition does not daunt him. His boldness and vigour are not impaired by responsibility. He maintains a gay cheerfulness, in combination with cool sagacity and fearless courage. He possesses much tact in business, and has a reputation for generally succeeding in what he undertakes. It is also an advantage that he is less tied by party connexions than most of our leading statesmen; so that he will be more at liberty to appoint the best men to civil offices and military and naval commands.

We cannot deny that the new Premier has faults which must be regarded with some anxiety, especially now that he is raised to so high an office. He is somewhat careless, hasty, and immethodical, his foreign policy was dashing, and not the most safe; he is fond of playing a bold, deep game; nor was he perfectly consistent in his attachment either to principles or to men; personal ambition has at times influenced his conduct. We are not certain whether, as head of the Cabinet, he will inspire in his colleagues that confidence in his wisdom which contributes so much to the harmony and efficiency of an Administration. His name is at present popular in France, but unpopular in Germany.

Such being our impartial estimate of Lord Palmerston, we must repeat that, with all his faults, he is the best Premier for the present crisis, and indeed the only man who could have formed an Administration. The welfare of the country requires that he should receive a powerful and zealous support in Parliament. Knowing, as he does, that he is called to the Government in order that he may save the army, and prosecute the War with success till we can achieve a just and honourable Peace, we trust he will be encouraged to apply his energies to those all-important objects, and will not be diverted from them by any factious opposition in Parliament.

Now this is declaring the thing as it is. There is at present a good deal of romance about the subject of Lord Palmerston's appointment. We think the best friends of His Lordship are not those who load him with wholesale adulation. He has drawbacks not a few, but his virtues are such as far to outweigh them all; and when the deductions are made, which truth demands, enough remains behind to entitle him to his Sovereign's confidence and the Nation's admiration. Politically viewed, the noble Lord is a man of easy virtue, putting us in mind of the Irish Parson, who turned from Popery to Protestantism, or the reverse, as the case required, and whose maxim was,—

Be King who may,
I must be Vicar of Bray.

Lord Palmerston, for well nigh half-a-century, has acted upon a similar rule; His Lordship's maxim would appear to have been, whichever side supplies the Cabinet, I must have a place in it. This feature of His Lordship's character which has throughout marked his career, still continues to distinguish it—never more, perhaps, than at the present moment. It is curious that his course during the recent crisis, in relation to Lord Derby, should hitherto, so far as we have seen, have escaped the observation of the Press. Lord Derby frankly states, that nothing stood between him and a junction with Lord Palmerston, but His Lordship's "late Colleagues." Earl Derby says, nothing was wanted but "the concurrence and co-operation of some of his friends in the late Government to give me that assistance and support which otherwise he did not express himself disinclined to give." "Here then, had Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Sidney Herbert been pliable we might have seen Earl Derby Premier, and Lord Palmerston, probably, Secretary-at-War, and Mr. Disraeli ruling in the Home Department! We are only stating the fact, without animadversion. Political principle, so-called, may be carried to the extent of a most unpatriotic length. A country may be so situated as to render it obligatory upon all parties, for a time, to merge their chief party distinctions, and to unite on common ground, for the furtherance of the common good. Such men surely deserve praise rather than censure; and such a man, we believe, in the main, throughout, has been Lord Palmerston.

The Money Market.

Money, the sinew of war, is abundant at Amsterdam, at Paris, and at London; and that invariable concomitant of war, paper issues on mere credit, is literally flooding the nations. The Turkish army and what supports it are paid off in paper, worthless because it will not command money; this is the way Austria supports its half million of men in the field; and now Russia has just resolved to meet the future expenses of the war by the issue of unconvertible paper or by mere credit. Of course the old plan of forbidding the export of coinage is resorted to. The Czar is all-powerful; but he has not men enough, nor guns enough to prevent money, the real article, from being smuggled away out of circulation in return for the stores that must be had to support the Russian army. Money, we mean gold and silver, will soon be rare in Russia; its attempted substitute, government credit, as a circulating medium, will be a drug. The patriotism of the people may loan their captital to the government and take government securities in return as the people of France have done; but the holders of stores will rather keep their goods than exchange them for depreciated paper. If it should prove otherwise, if the Czar is able to keep an unconvertible paper dollar up to par with a gold dollar, he will be entitled to the medal for having found the philosopher's stone.

Russian Advance in India.

THE BATTLE OF BUNDER ABBAS.

The correspondent of the London Times, writing from Bombay on the 16th of January, says:—I have already alluded to the probability of Persia becoming the paramount power in Affghanistan on the death of Dost Mahomed, and there are two other directions besides Candahar in which she is rapidly extending her frontier.

A battle has been fought at Bunder Abbas between the Arabs and the Persians, in which the latter were successful. A Persian force of 12,000 horsemen, with six guns and two mortars, appeared before Bunder Abbas in the beginning of December, and shelled the place for two days and nights; on the third day the garrison, consisting of 1,700 men, met the Persians at the gates, and an engagement took place, which lasted for several hours. The Arab force, overpowered by numbers, took to the boats and fled to the man-of-war belonging to the Imaum of Muscat. The Arabs lost in killed and wounded about 1,400, while the Persians lost about 4,000. The Arabs were commanded by the eldest son of the Imaum. He is determined to hazard another battle before giving up Bender Abbas to the Persians. The Imaum is said to be mustering a large force, which he will command in person: so that we may shortly expect to hear of another engagement.

The ownership of Bunder Abbas cannot at all affect British interests, but with the probability before us of the Shah becoming the paramount power along the whole extent of our Indus frontier, from Mekran to Pashawur, it is unquestionably our policy to do all in our power to prevent Russian influence from becoming paramount in Persia, for if the Russians were established in Turkistan, Persia would be merely a Russian satrapy.

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1855.

☞ A New York exchange, speaking of the decision in the case of Miss Jennings, a colored lady, who was forced from one of the city cars, on which she had got for the purpose of riding to church on a Sabbath, during the last summer, and who subsequently prosecuted the Company, laying her damages at $500, says:—

"The plaintiff claimed $500 dollars in her complaint, and a majority of the Jury were for giving her the full amount; but others maintained some peculiar notions as to coloured people's rights, and they finally agreed on $225, on which the Court added ten per cent, besides the costs.

The Tribune well says:—"Railroads, steamboats, omnibuses and ferry-boats will be admonished from this as to the rights of respectable coloured people. It is time the rights of this class of citizens were ascertained, and that it should be known whether they are to be thrust from our public conveyances, while German or Irish women, with a quarter of mutton or a load of codfish, can be admitted." It seems, however, that the Eighth Avenue Railroad Company is not yet willing to abolish its barbarous and inhuman rule. The following was reported in the Tribune on Monday:—

A NEW YORK SCENE.—A little before 9 o'clock p.m., on Saturday, a decent-looking coloured woman entered one of the Eighth Avenue Cars in Canal Street, and had reached the middle of it, when the conductor observed her and ordered her to go out, which she refused to do, telling him that she wished to ride and had a right to do so, as had recently been established by a Judicial decision in Brooklyn. The conductor replied that his orders were imperative, and again ordered her out. She still refused to go, when he clinched her, and, with the aid of the driver, after a desperate struggle of some minutes, forced her into the middle of the street, where she was left in the bitter cold, her clothes badly torn and herself somewhat injured. The passengers throughout the fray manifested disgust at the outrage and sympathy with its victim. None of them had indicated a wish that she should be expelled. Of course, the conductor was but obeying orders; but where does this place those who gave these orders?

The Rev. Dr. Pennington has complained to the Mayor of another similar case, which occurred on the Eighth Avenue Railroad, on Monday; Miss Carolina Steadman, of Brooklyn, a seamstress, on her way to Twentieth Street, being forcibly prevented, notwithstanding the extreme severity of the weather, from entering a car. Dr. Pennington calls upon the Mayor "to restrain said Company and its conductors from such a course of conduct in future, and requires them to observe the laws." We hope the Mayor will comply with this reasonable request.

Although Miss Jennings is said to be in every sense of the word a lady, being intelligent, refined in manners and of a very respectable appearance, the passengers in the car who saw the whole affair, and the crowd around, suffered a brutal conductor to push her off the platform. Could the circumstance of a white woman being treated in such a manner, without having given provocation, have occurred, some gentleman, regardless of consequences, would have stepped forward as champion forthwith. But in this case, the sympathy was about as observable and effectual as one may imagine expressed around an auction block, when some "likely negroes" are about to change owners.

In his charge to the jury, Judge Rockwell said that the Company were liable for all acts of their agents, that as common carriers, they were bound to carry all respectable persons, and that colored persons could not be expelled by any rules of the Company, nor by force or violence. Notwithstanding, however, the charge, and the fact that a majority were favorable to giving the amount claimed, the "peculiar notions" entertained by the minority as to colored people's rights, were sufficient to overcome the sense of justice of the majority, leading to a reduction of more than one-half the amount. S.

☞ The Prohibitory Liquor Law passed the New York House of Assembly on the 21st ult., by a vote of 80 to 44. It still awaits the passage through the Senate and the signature of the Governor before coming a law. Little doubt seems to be entertained that this will soon take place.

☞ A Bill passed the United States Senate on the 17th Feb., by which certain Indians will be compensated for the loss of slaves. The money to be paid out of the National Treasury.

☞ The Prohibitory Liquor Law has also passed one branch of the Delaware Legislature. The prohibition movement is becoming general in the States, and when the national mind becomes less beclouded with the fumes of spirituous liquors, we may begin to hope that it will be enabled to get clear ideas on the question of human rights.

Provincial Parliament.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

The Prohibitory Liquor Law.

QUEBEC, February 27.

A large number of items on the order of the day having been severally read, and postponed, the Clerk at length reached—"House in committee on the bill to prevent the traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Mr. FELTON moved the House into committee accordingly.

Mr. DRUMMOND suggested that, as the House was still thin, and the bill an important one, the order should be postponed until to-morrow fortnight.

Mr. FELTON could not see that there was any good reason for postponing the order. He thought they should go into committee now, and leave the third reading for a full house.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON hoped the honorable mover would be induced to postpone the order. For his own part he did not know what were the amendments which had been made on the bill by the Temperance Committee, and he would like more time to be given to members to consider them.

Solicitor-General Ross also urged a postponement of the order.

Mr. FELTON persisted in pressing it, and said the amended bill had been printed and in the hands of members for the last three months, surely ample time for all to consider its provisions.

Hon. Mr. SPENCE said the second reading of the Bill had been carried by 97 to 5, the largest vote given this session, and showing an overwhelming majority in favour of the principle of the Bill. (Hear, hear). After the expediency of adopting a Prohibitory Liquor Law had been so strongly affirmed by this House, he could not understand why his hon colleagues should ask further delay. He trusted that hon. members who had voted for the second reading would now be found faithful to the obligations.

Attorney-General MACDONALD.—Don't you wish you may get it?

Hon. Mr. SPENCE said he did hope that both the honorable Attorney-General and the honorable Premier would vote for the Order of the Day being proceeded with. If the present bill did not quite come up to their ideas, let them put forth their influence and substitute a more stringent measure. (Hear, hear, and laughter.)

Dr. CLARKE, as one of the majority of the 97, said he had not intended by voting for the second reading to pledge himself to the principle of the bill.

Sir. ALLAN MCNAB said his hon. friend, the Postmaster-General knew very well that according to rules of this House, a bill could not be referred till it had been read a second time, and, if his recollection served him rightly, the reason why so large a vote was given for the second reading was to allow the bill to be referred to a committee. He would not like it to be understood that there had been a vote of 97 to 5 in favour of the bill as it now stood, and he hoped the gentleman in charge of it would not proceed with the order in the circumstances of the case.

On a division, the motion for the House going into Committee, was declared to be carried by 49 to 18.

Mr. MACKENZIE moved that, as the honorable member for Prince Edward (Mr. Stevenson) was asleep while the vote was being taken, the resolution be read to him, and permission given to him to vote. (Laughter.)

The name of Mr. Stevenson having been added to the Yeas, made the division (which has already appeared under our telegraphic head) 50 to 18. All the members of the Government present, except Mr. Spence, and Solicitor General Smith, voted in the minority.

The House then went into Committee on the bill—Dr. Tache in the chair.

On the question for the adoption of the first clause, which embodied the principle of the bill,

Solicitor General SMITH suggested that, after this should be adopted, the committee should rise. He had voted for going into committee, because he was a sincere supporter of the bill, and wished to see the orders of the House carried out, but once the principle was again affirmed by the adoption of the first clause, he thought the details might be left for mature consideration by a full house.

Mr. FELTON assented to taking this course.

Mr. TURCOTTE, in French, opposed the clause, and animadverted on the inconsistency of some of its supporters, who, he said, were as fond of their liquors as others. He had seen the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Mackenzie) in such a state, that he required support to enable him to walk straight.

Mr. MACKENZIE assured the hon. gentleman that he was quite mistaken as to the facts of the case. On the occasion referred to, it was the late hon. Commissioner of Public Works who required assistance in the way mentioned, and he (Mr. Mackenzie) had lent him his arm. He was opposed, however, to any such personalities being introduced into this House. If he or any of his friends happened to take a horn too much, it was not fair for their neighbors who happened to see them to mention it thus publicly. [Laughter.]

Mr. LARWILL followed in the same line of remarks as Mr. Turcotte. People generally throughout the province could not imagine for a moment that the gentleman who had introduced this bill drank wine himself. Yet he had drunk it frequently in his [Mr. Larwill's] presence. [Laughter.] But because he introduced a bill of this sort the impression went abroad that the hon. member for Sherbrooke county must be a great philanthropist.—The bill was altogether anti-British, and the great mass of the people were opposed to it. They would quite lose their character in England if they passed such a stupid bill as this to rob each other of their rights. It was well known that it could never be carried, and it was only brought up to please a parcel of old women and silly children. It was said that the measure had been largely petitioned for, but the reason of this was that pretty and amiable girls were always selected to carry round the petitions, and it was no wonder that they got a parcel of simple men and boys to sign them. They were told that 70,000 of the inhabitants had petitioned for it; but 80,000 of the inhabitants, through the most appropriate channel, their township and county councils, had petitioned this Parliament to prevent colored immigration, and their petition had received no attention. When, however, a set of girls ran round the country villages and got a parcel of people who could neither read nor write to sign their names, then it was said that the whole province was wanting the measure. The whole thing was a humbug from beginning to end.

Mr. DUFRESNE, in French, replied to the arguments of Mr. Turcotte and Mr. Larwill.

The clause was then adopted by a majority of 45 to 25, and the committee rose, and reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Monday week, to be then the first order of the day.

The House then adjourned at 6 o'clock till to-morrow.

Report of the Great Western Railway.

The Quebec correspondent of the Montreal Gazette, gives the following outline of the Report of Messrs Cameron and Coffin, the Commissioners appointed by Government to enquire into the circumstance of the loss of life at the Baptist Creek on the Great Western Railway. The Commissioners appear to have performed their duty well.

They state that, in the execution of their trust they not only visited the scene of the disasters to be enquired into, but the States of New York and Michigan as well, there they acquired much valuable information about the accidents themselves, and concerning railway management in those States also. They found that between the 10th November, 1853 [the date of the opening of the road], and the 1st November, 1854, 17 serious accidents occurred, all but one of them being attended with loss of life. In nine of these cases, however, death resulted from the carelessness or rashness of the victims and in another no blame was traceable to the company or its servants. An accident occurred at Princeton on the 27th of June, 1854, which resulted in the death of two persons, six more being injured. The cause of the accident was the removal of the rails for repairs by a tracklayer, named Beemer, without the display of the usual signals. He had, however, been acquitted by a jury when brought to trial. The Commissioners recommend that the vene of the case should be removed from the locality whenever prejudice is likely to defeat the ends of justice. Three other fatal accidents resulted from the want of fencing. One of these occurred near Hamilton on the 12th of December, 1853,—the train encountering three cows, part of it being thrown off the track, and the fireman being killed. The second was near Lobo, and took place on the 2nd June, 1854. Here the engine ran against a cow, the train was thrown off the track down a high embankment, six people were killed and fourteen injured. The Commissioners are of opinion that the driver must have seen the cow in time to have been able to "break up," but he did not do so. The spot was a peculiarly dangerous one—the embankment being high and narrow, and the cow having no chance of escape unless she jumped down it, which she was afraid to do. The Commissioners condemned the embankment as improperly built. The engine driver was let off by the coroner's jury, but the Commissioners differing in opinion with it, took evidence, and sent it down to the Government with a special report, in consequence of which the law officers of the crown have caused the man to be arrested, and he will be proceeded against at the next assizes. Another feature in this accident, noticed by the Commissioners, is this, the parties injured were poor Norwegian emigrants, crowded into a freight car with their heavy baggage. When they were tumbled over the embankment, this fell upon them, and aided in their slaughter, since those in the second class car behind, escaped without any mortal injuries. The cars containing them had been cut off the train of the day before and sent back from Chatham to London, because an Irishman had complained at that place, that he had been carried beyond his destination. The officials of the company took no care of them, and paid no attention to their wants during the twenty-four hours they were detained. The punishment inflicted was, in the opinion of the Commissioners, quite too lenient, that of the conducter and station master, being little the more than nominal. In the third case of accident from defective fencing, which occurred at Thorold on the 16th of July last. The engine driver ran against some horses on the track, which, though at night, he acknowledged he saw, the moon shining brightly at the time. The train was knocked partly off the track, one on two of the cars smashed, 7 persons killed and 14 wounded. This occurred near a bridge, where he was bound to have proceeded slowly—the track was also unballasted and rough, thus furnishing another reason for caution; yet, he seems to have made a rush at the horses at top speed, to frighten them off the track or run them down. This statement, however, is inferential, as no satisfactory evidence could be procured. Here, too, the lack of the requisite number and kinds of tools for cases of emergency, were not on the train, as they were likewise wanting in the subsequent terrible disaster at Baptist Creek. Much delay in relieving the injured was the consequence. The Commissioners take the opportunity to condemn the conduct but too generally in vogue among engine drivers, of running at and over cattle when on the track, whether such a course is necessary or not. It is the frequent cause of accident and the drivers themselves, though undoubtedly recklessly exposing their own lives at the same time, know that the great weight of the engine and tender not unfrequently take them safely over, while the cars behind them are displaced from the track. They also notice an incident which occurred at the same place, while they were pursuing their investigations there. A part of the line was raised on tressle work over a ravine with a curve at each end. Here the trains necessarily proceeded slowly. A party of men were at work at one end of the tressle work, a little boy had started from his father's house at the other with water for the party. The boy was cold, his cap ears were down, and he did not hear the train coming; he had no place to walk on but this bank, and the driver ran against him and pitched him into the ravine below. He either did not see him as he should have done if properly mindful of his duties, or he was so cruel as neither to stop or to offer relief himself or to inform any one on the line that they might go to him. But for a woman passing that way the little fellow might have perished. In connection with this accident also, the Commissioners remark upon the necessity for the use of engine bells, such as are in use on all other American Railways, and are ordered to be used in Canada by the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, which however does not apply to the Great Western Railway. They are especially necessary at all stations and depot grounds, and at all bridges and crossings. They are not in use in England and, therefore the Great Western Railway Company do not use them. Nor is it compelled like other Companies to have sign-boards of warning at all crossings on a level with the high ways crossed. Such crossings, say the Commissioners, are dangerous even with the sign boards, and should be provided with gates and gate-keepers, but as the Legislature, to lighten the expense has relieved them from these safeguards the other is imperatively demanded. Two or three accidents are next referred to, unattended with fatal results, but showing the dangers attendant upon the working of unfinished roads. In one of them near Niagara Falls, a large stone rolled down from the side of a cutting upon the track, and the engine and train encountered the obstruction. Last of the series, we have the frightful accident at Baptist Creek, on the 27th of October last, when an Express Train being detained over seven hours behind its time, a gravel train ventured upon the track before daylight in a thick fog which prevented the light shown from being seen, and the result was a most fearful collision. Forty-eight persons were killed on the spot, or died very shortly after the collision. Nine subsequently died in hospital, and forty-six were more or less injured and mutilated who survive. The Commissioners entered into a minute examination of one of the causes of the delay, the derangement of a portion of the machinery of one of the locomotives of the express train, for which the ingenuity of Mr. Bowman, the Locomotive Superintendent, has been successful in providing a preventive for the future. But the immediate cause they state distinctly to have been the running of the gravel train until it was certain the express train had passed, and they as unhesitatingly lay the chief burden of blame on Twitchell, the conductor. Kettlewell, the engine driver, had before informed the officers of the Company that these trains had been run out too near express time. He was told in reply that Mr. Twitchell was responsible, and he did not dare disobey his orders. Going up then from Twitchell to the higher officers of the Campany, they trace the origin of the accident to the fact, that the company had opened their road in an unfinished state, and instead of ballasting it themselves, gave it to a contractor to do. It was for the interest of that contractor to have his men at work on the line as constantly as possible, hence the recklessness of his employees. Again, the company should have had a switchman at the place where the track to the gravel pit joined the main track, but though one had been appointed, he had left some days before, and no other had been appointed in his place. There was in fact no check placed on these employees of the ballasting contractor by the company, for though they had the appointment of the conductor, driver, &c., they were in the pay and directly under the control of the contractor. Twitchell should have been dismissed on the previous information of Kettlewell. The company opened the road before its completion, contrary to the advice of their late chief engineer, Mr. Clark, now chief engineer of the State of New York, who stated, in a letter to the managing director, it would be attended with danger to life and property, and they entered into this contract for ballasting contrary to the advice of their late assistant chief engineer, Mr. Scott. "We find," say the commissioners, "that at the opening of the road the embankments and the cuttings were in a dangerous state, that the ties or sleepers were laid without the stay or support of gravel on the surface, and at sub-grade; the road-crossings, farm crossings, and cattle guards were unfinished. The tressle works, in some cases substituted for embankments, were notoriously insecure, and, in fact, neither grading nor superstructure were in a fit state to hazard the prosecution of the traffic in the face of the contingencies of the coming winter and spring." A great defect is found to arise from throwing too much work on one man—the managing director. He occupies the position and performs the duties confided to two officers, the President and Superintendent, by most American and Canadian railway companies, and has thus assumed, or had imposed upon him, more work than any one man can possibly accomplish. I have passed over the examination made into the deplorable occurrence at Windsor, where so many poor Norwegians were left to perish of cholera. The commissioners arrived at the conclusion that that affair was owing to a series of mishaps that the company could not prevent, but aggravated undoubtedly by the fact that a good many of these poor people were stowed in a box freight car, in terribly hot weather. In conclusion, they recommend as a preventive of these evils, a number of amendments to the railway clauses act, providing for the appointment of a railway inspector, (who must be a civil engineer of several years' standing,) to examine all works in progress, and the working of them after completed, without whose certificate no road can be opened or worked, and who is to exercise a general supervision over the working of railways, reporting to and acting under the control of the railway commissioners; in fact being their executive officer. They also recommend a stringent law respecting the mode of conveyance of other than first class passengers, condemning severely the custom of stowing them away in freight cars, and think it advisable to appoint a resident emigrant agent somewhere on this line to look after the interests of emigrants passing over it. Police to be furnished railway companies out of the Provincial force, if raised. The expences of these new officers to be defrayed ont of a mileage rate on the railways, which shall then be freed from local assessments. All railway companies realizing over a certain amount of gross earnings to be compelled to build a double track on the whole or part of the road. Such is a brief outline of this very able report. Though I cannot agree in all its suggestions, it is clear that a majority of them must be carried out, and the country will owe something as well to the Government as to the commissioners for the manner in which this task has been undertaken and carried out. A great deal of valuable information has been gleaned from various sources, and will, I believe, be printed with the report as a sort of appendix. Some of it will, no doubt, be superfluous and unnecessary; it seems to be the fate of all such reports to be thus cumbered; but, judging from the tone of the report itself, the bulk of it will be very valuable.

Patriotic Fund.

At an adjourned meeting, numerously attended, of St. Andrew's Society last night, it was announced that the amount paid in by the collectors for the Patriotic Fund to the Treasurer, is now £849 9s. 2d., and the amount subscribed but not yet collected is £155. It was decided to transmit the money through the Mayor of the city, as a portion of the subscription of the City of Toronto to the Patriotic Fund.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT ON THE HAMILTON AND PORT DOVER ROAD.—Those of our readers who have travelled this road will have observed the position of the toll-gate near the steam-mill on the Boston Creek, and adjoining on or upon the 4th Concession of Oneida, which at this point crosses over the Creek by a wood bridge, and the Creek at this point nearly closes with the plank road, so that there is hardly room for a team to make a sweep either in coming down the Concession or over the bridge, so as to clear the gate and toll-house.

A teamster, Peter Cullom, was driving a span of horses, with a long stick of timber, over the bridge, and through the toll-gate, last week, and the stick proving too long to turn the acute angle from the bridge through the gate, struck the toll-house, a frame building, carrying the front side in, and forcing the driver through with it, fixing him in such a position that the timber had to be cut away to release his arm, which is very much lacerated, but at present too much swollen to allow of examination as to the state of the bones. The wonder is, he was not crushed to death. We learned the other day, that hopes are entertained of his recovery.—Hamilton Spectator.

Seeking Fugitive Slaves in Chicago—Coloured People Flogging Slave Hunters.

About two months ago, two men, who live near Independence, Missouri, named Calvert and Bagsby, came to this city in search of their runaway slaves, who had come thus far on their way to freedom,—they put up at the City Hotel, and their business soon leaked out. Their runaway chattels were all here, consisting of two young women and two men. They soon found out this, and enlisted in their service a person named Thurston, who promised to catch their negroes for them for $40. This they paid over to him, but Thurston found that negro catching was not quite so easy a matter, and did not fulfil his promise. The colored people here concluded that they had bothered them long enough, and concluded to give them a sound whipping and send them back to Missouri. So on Friday night, one of their number, whom Calvert and Bagsby had often tried to bribe, went out to walk with them, and conduced them down to Buffalo st., where some fifteen stout gentlemen from Africa awaited them. Mr. Calvert was armed with a pistol, and on finding himself in rather dangerous company, drew it, and attempted to shoot one of his assailants. He was immediately knocked down and delivered over to the tender mercies of a two-fisted negro, who gave him a sound dressing, while his comrade was treated in the same manner. They were then set upon their feet, and told to run for their lives, which they did in excellent style. They left for home yesterday morning, without their "niggers," having expended two months' time and two or three hundred dollars in the search for them, and armed all the time with a writ from the United States Court for their apprehenson, and covered all over with the panoply of the Fugitive Slave Law.—Chicago Tribune.

A New Question in the Public Schools—Liquor Law Presentations—The Temperance Party Persevering—Passage of Maine Law in Indiana.

CINCINNATI, February 16, 1855.

An occurrence has just taken place in our city which strongly illustrates the power of prejudice against color, even in a place where a much better feeling exists towards the colored people, among intelligent persons, than in older cities at the East. Miss Newhall, a teacher in the Seventh District Public School, finding a boy in her room slightly tinged with colored blood, refused to instruct him, after repeated directions from the Trustees to do so. The matter was, last week, brought before the School Board by the Trustees, with a resolution dismissing Miss Newhall, which was not adopted; but the whole subject was referred back to the local Trustees, with power to act. On their directing the lady to receive and teach the boy, she complied under protest, and, this week, appealed to the School Board, asking that the boy be dismissed or removed to one of the colored schools. This gave rise to considerable discussion, and, after various propositions and motions, all of which were negatived, a resolution was passed dismissing the colored boy from the school, by a vote of 15 Yeas to 10 Noes, nine of the board being absent. Had all the members been present, the result would probably have been the same.

In the discussion which preceded the final vote, it was maintained by several of the minority that the decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio applied to this case, viz: that a child possessing more than half white blood must be considered a white child, and a resolution was offered affirming that the Board felt itself bound by that decision. Those who voted for the resolution adopted, did so on the ground that the law establishing colored schools in this city was intended to provide schools not only for blacks, but for all children possessed of negro blood, no matter of what degree. I understand that the boy referred to is nearly white, his father being a white man and his mother a Quadroon, and that it is only upon a close inspection that any one would discover that he is not perfectly white. I have heard a general expression of opinion, by all who know the facts in the case, that, whatever the law, strictly construed, may be, the teacher was entirely too sensitive, and has made a great ado about a small matter. The relatives of the boy will take the necessary steps to bring the matter before the Supreme Court, where it is altogether probable the principle involved will be decided against the School Board. Colored persons having a large portion of white blood are recognised as citizens under our laws, and several such voted at our State election last fall.

Messrs. Goodman and Ogden, the Trustees of the Seventh District School, resigned their offices when the decision of the School Board was made. The reason they give is that their self-respect will not permit them to occupy a seat in a Board which would expel a child from the public schools because it was slightly tinctured with negro blood.—Cor. of Anti-Slavery Standard.

A Remarkable Man.

Died, at Mechanicsville, Montgomery county, Md., on the 27th ult., Washington HODGE, a respectable and well-known colored man, in the 48th year of his age. His disease was the typhoid fever, which has been particularly fatal, during the present season, among people of color in this healthy region, and under which his powerful frame sank, after a week's sickness.

The deceased was a remarkable man. He had worked in the village, at the trade of a blacksmith, for thirty years; and, though as dark in color as the iron he knew so well how to handle and temper, was much respected by his employers, and by all who knew him. He was faithful, industrious, and temperate, and acquired by his exertion a fair amount of property.

But, beyond these not uncommon traits, he possessed certain qualities that awakened an unusual degree of interest in his character, among persons of high intelligence and discrimination. From several individuals of that description, the writer of this article has heard such expressions as the following: "Washington Hodge is certainly a natural genius—a man of clear, strong mind, and, withal, a native gentleman." He possessed a just self-respect, amounting to true dignity, and his deportment was alike free from every trace of insolence and of servility. He frequently counselled his colored friends to be strictly obedient to the laws, and always set them a good example in his own person.

There was something of the heroic about him, as is shown in the following incident: It must be mentioned, that he was a large man, tall, and well proportioned, and possessed of extraordinary physical power. One day, while busily engaged at his labors in the smith-shop, a man rode up to the door, and ordered him, in an imperious manner, to fasten up to the shop door a printed advertisement. Hodge, with his usual respectful politeness, was going to comply, when he discovered that it was an advertisement offering a reward for a fugitive slave. He refused then to touch the paper. The man, giving Hodge the benefit of some rough maledictions, stuck up the advertisement himself. Hodge tore it down, saying firmly, but quietly, that he would not work in a shop with such a sign at the door. Then the impatient gentleman, irritated by such unaccustomed obstinacy, drew a pistol, and declared he would shoot him. "T-t-take sure aim, then," said Hodge, who was a little given to stammering, "or, be-be-be-d," (and, as he spoke, he swung up with his Herculean arm, a pondrous smith's hammer,) "if you miss me, you're a dead man!" The man didn't shoot, and the blacksmith went on quietly with his work.

Other incidents of a similar character, could be related, all going to prove that this departed black was, every inch of him, a man.

He is gone; and if, as I have heard it intimated, Nature made a mistake in giving him a black skin, he has gone where that and all other mistakes will be fully rectified.—National Era, Feb. 15.

NEW JERSEY—DEFEAT OF THE PROHIBITORY BILL.—The Prohibitory Liquor bill, after passing the House, has been defeated in the Senate. The final vote was taken on the 22nd ult. The Newark Mercury says: "In the afternoon, long before 3 o'clock, the passages leading to the galleries were completely jammed with ladies, and, the doors being opened, there ensued a great scramble for seats. It seemed as if the fair ones had turned out en masse for the purpose of awing the "grave and reverend" Senators into the enactment of the desired law. The lobbies were also crowded long before the opening of the afternoon session, and hundreds were obliged to go away as they came, being unable to obtain admittance. A large proportion of those in the lobbies were ladies, who could not get into the gallery."

After an exciting debate, the bill was lost, 10 to 9. The announcement of this vote was received with a perfect storm of hisses, and for a time the greatest confusion prevailed. Ladies even testified their disapprobation of the vote in this undignified manner.

COLD WEATHER IN OHIO.—The Dayton (O.) Journal tells the following:—We don't intend to brag about our cold weather, but we never recollect hearing of an instance in which a man's eye was frozen shut, except that to which we now refer. The driver of a sleigh, coming from Jamestown to Xenia, exhibited to his passengers an icecicle about as large as a buckshot, pendant from the upper lid of his right eye. The eye was entirely closed—literally frozen shut. His left eye was chilled, so that it was with difficulty that he kept the lids in motion. A raw wind was blowing, and the passengers in the sleigh kept their faces covered.

☞ The Buffalo papers state that the new Superintendent of the Buffalo and Brantford R. R. will re-open the line this day. Sixty thousand dollars have been raised to relieve the Road from its pressing debts, and all the claims of the unpaid labourers will be satisfied forthwith, and the route put upon an independent footing.

Rum and Rheumatism.

A great deal has been written, and more said to account for the deplorable loss of life in the English army around Sebastopol. The blame has been attributed to the climate, to the bad army system, to Lord Raglan, to the commissariat, and to all of these causes combined. These will serve to account for very much of the loss, but not, we think, for all of it.

One officer writes in a jocular strain, that in his opinion the cause of most of the prevailing diseases is the men "catching their death of cold;" and we know from official reports, that rheumatism, in its various forms, has carried off large numbers, and disabled more. Now it a fact perfectly well known to all who have studied the total-abstinence question, that one of the surest effects of the habitual use of alcoholic liquors is to increase the liability to colds, and, of course, to all the diseases which colds produce. In the English army, rum is served out to all the men twice a day, and both officers and men are accustomed to the liberal and daily use of such other liquors as their purses enable them to procure.

We firmly believe that if the English army had all been water-drinkers, one third of the loss of life in the Crimea from disease would have been spared. The use of beer, wine, and rum may impart to the men a certain fullness of person and rudiness of face, but it does not generate that kind of stamina which enables them to withstand the hardships of a winter campaign. The French, who drink less, do not look as strong as the English, but they can bear more.—Life Illustrated.

THE PRESS.

AN ODE.

The warrior ruled his crimson age
With brazen helm, and spear, and shield,
And mad Ambition's lust and rage
Made Earth a reeking battle-field;
And thrones were built and propped with swords,
And man was scourged with chain and rod,
And kings, and priests, and feudal lords
Elate o'er prostrate millions trod.

But never more shall steel-clad hand
Alone to rule the world have power;
A mightier spirit walks the land
In court and camp, in hall and bower—
The Soul of Man! unchained at length,
In Reason's name and Freedom's might,
To break the despot's iron strength,
And end Oppression's awful night!

The Soul of Man! that asks not sword,
Nor trump, nor plume, nor banner's train,
To smite the tyrant, king, and lord,
And give the nation's life again—
But shall, in Freedom's name, unbind
The world, and smite its woe and wrong,
With THOUGHT—the jewel of the mind!
And SPEECH—the glory of the tongue!

And, wide as earth, the PRESS shall bear
That thought and speech on wings of flame,
Till FAUST and FRANKLIN'S names shall share
A more than king or warrior's fame—
And man rejoicing—freed at length—
Shall bless the PRINTER'S ART, that gave
His thought and speech immortal strength,
To free Earth's serf and Error's slave!

Preservation of Wheat in Tennessee.

The following communication by a correspondent of the Plough, the Loom and the Anvil, respecting wheat threshing, will be found of interest to those whose brains are infested with the grain weevil:

"I am aware that very many of my farming friends in Tennessee are the readers of your valuable publication, and are heavy wheat growers; and now that recent railroad conveyance, with the foreign demand, has permanently settled upon this valuable grain a fair price here, it is not at all unlikely that much more attention will be paid to the growing of wheat in future. A few otherwise systematic and economical farmers in Tennessee raise a pretty fair crop of wheat, and have no barns to house in. This is a very great desideratum to a wheat-grower; and the want of good barns, with some other proximate causes of mismanagement, sometimes results in material damage to the wheat of the farmers before it reaches the miller's hopper. Therefore, through you, to my farming friends in Tennessee, let me, without ostentation, give my experience in harvesting and saving a wheat crop, referring at the same time to my acquaintances for the character of my wheat crops.

"Whenever the straw of the wheat becomes of a golden yellow for about two inches below the ear or head, disregarding any other feature in the straw or grain, I cut it down, bind it right up after the scythe in small binds, shock likewise in small shocks. I let it stand thus in the field till it cures and dries perfectly, so that the grain would grind, and no longer. I haul to the barn, thresh out when convenient, unless I notice a sign of weevil breeding in the wheat, when I thresh at once; and having a large bin for the purpose in the barn, I crib it up in the chaff till it is needed. In this way I have saved and do save one thousand bushels of wheat clear from mold, heat or must. The bran is always thin and tough, the flour white and sweet, preserving its native fermenting qualities to the satisfaction of the most fastidious epicure in any clime."

Cultivation of the Ruta Baga.

This root can be easily and profitably raised in the following manner: Take sod or stubble ground, and plough it in the fall or early in the spring. The last of May, spread on sufficient manure to make the ground rich. The quantity will depend upon the quality of the manure and the previous condition of the soil. Let the plough, drag and bush, succeed each other, until the manure is thoroughly incorporated with the soil and the ground made fine and light. On sod, this process should be repeated three times at least, to accomplish it. Throw up the ground into ridges 2 feet apart. Bush the ridges lengthwise. This will remove the stone and sods from the top of them. The first week in June, with a hand drill, put in the seed, at the rate of one pound per acre. A tin cup, with an awl-hole in the bottom, may be substituted for the drill, when there is none at hand. A handle, twenty inches long, should be put upon the side of the cup. Pass along the rows, shaking the cup back and forth, near the ground. Cover the seed lightly with a rake.

When the third leaf begins to start, stir the ground with a plough between the rows; hoe and thin out the plants, leaving but one in ten inches. Plough and hoe at least three times, and plaster twice. If the insects trouble the plants, put on ashes. The crop will depend much upon the attention it receives after the plants are up. Gather in the fall, as soon as the hard frosts commence. Cut off the tops with a hoe, and pull out the turnip with a potato hook, knocking off the dirt at the same time. When they are dry, take up one in each hand, and thump them together as they are put into the basket. In this way, if the turnips are of good size, two men can gather and put into the cellar, one hundred and fifty bushels in a day. Too many should not be put together, and the cellar should not be made too warm, or they may rot.

An efficient brush may be made by taking half of a round stick, six inches through, and seven feet long, for the head; bore seven holes through it, ten inches apart, with a ten-inch auger. Insert in these holes saplings of good length, filled with fine brush. The flat side of the head should be placed forward. Such a brush passed over a meadow in the spring, where cattle have run in the winter, will pulverize and spread the manure better than it can be done by hand, and at much less expense.—Country Gentleman.

The Shanghai.

There has been "any amount" of sport made, of late months, of Shanghai Fowls. They seem to be losing much of their first popularity among us, like many another two-legged foreigners who has paid us a visit of honour, which ended very differently. The Shanghai is born in the world with an inordinate pair of legs, which thereafter continue to grow into regular drum-sticks of the longest dimensions. It is asserted, too, that although good "layers," they are very fond of devouring their own eggs. A Mohawk farmer, who has tried them thoroughly, expresses a by no means favourable opinion of the breed. He says their true name is Shankhigh, and that they are rightly named:—"They have no body at all, and when the head is cut off, the legs come right apart. I don't see how they can set upon their eggs—my jack-knife can set as well as they can. They don't sit on the roost the same as other chickens: not a bit of it! When they attempt to sit as other chickens do (they straddle the stick), they fall off backward!

"They sit when they eat, I know; for I've seen 'em do it; and I've seen 'em try to eat standing—but they couldn't 'fetch it;' for when they peck at a grain of corn, on the ground, they don't more than half reach it, but the head bobs right between their legs, making them turn a complete somerset. I'd as soon see a pair of tongs or compasses walking about my yard, as these Shank-highs. They crow, too, a long time before day in the morning, when it isn't day; probably because their legs are so long that they can see day-light before the common chicken!"

CHARCOAL AS A DISINFECTANT.—Mr. Turnbull, about nine months ago, placed the bodies of two dogs in a wooden box, on a layer of charcoal powder a few inches in depth, and covered them over with a quantity of the same material. Though the box was quite open, and kept in his laboratory, no effluvia was ever perceptible; and on examining the bodies of the animals at the end of six months, scarcely anything remained of them except their bones. Mr. Turnbull sent me a portion of the charcoal powder which had been most closely in contact with the bodies of the dogs. I submitted it for examination to one of my pupils, Mr. Turner, who found it contained comparatively little ammonia, not a trace of sulphuretted hydrogen, but very appreciable quantities of nitric and sulphuric acids, with acid phosphate of lime. Mr. Turner subsequently, about three months ago, buried two rats in about two inches of charcoal powder, and a few days afterwards the body of a cat was similarly treated. Though the bodies of these animals are in a highly putrid state, not the slightest odor is perceptible in the laboratory. From this short statement of facts, the utility of charcoal powder as a means of preventing noxious effluvia from churchyards, and from dead bodies in other situations, such as on board ships, is sufficiently evident. Covering a church yard to the depth of two or three inches with scarcely powdered charcoal would effectually prevent any putrid exhalations ever finding their way into the atmosphere. Charcoal power also greatly favors the rapid decomposition of the dead bodies with which it is in contact, so that in the course of six or eight months little is left except the bones.—Dr. Stenhouse, in Pharmaceutical Journal.

☞ A learned Judge being once asked how he would act if a man owed him ten pounds and refused to pay him, replied: "Rather than bring an action, with its costs and uncertainty, I would give him a receipt in full of all demands—yea, and I would give him a check for five pounds to cover all possible costs."

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The numerous agricultural exchanges will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

JOHN E. FORCE,
Publisher and Proprietor.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

Believing in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, Free Discussion, Universal Freedom, and a British Union, based on complete Provincial Autonomy, and being impelled to pay how respectful attention to the plans now matured to effect the Emancipation of Her Majesty's subjects from Negro Slavery, on the grounds of the complete identity of character and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to use our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacities, as British subjects, to persuade a majority of the inhabitants of each and every Province of Canada, which shall so express itself in the Provincial Parliament, to petition Her Majesty to withhold her assent from any Bill or Bills for the Emancipation of Negro Slaves in the West Indies, which may not provide adequate safeguards for the rights of property, and for the maintenance of the supply of labour necessary for the cultivation of the soil of the said Provinces, and also to petition Her Majesty to withhold her assent from any Bill or Bills for the Abolition of Negro Slavery in the United States, which may not provide adequate safeguards for the rights of property, and for the maintenance of the supply of labour necessary for the cultivation of the soil of the said States, and this country, who would carry out a policy for emancipation, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein as to consulting the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition, or to segregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; do hereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as respects that of Great Britain, to check its progress in America, by all legitimate means; and 4th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts, both As a means of operations, to support the Provincial Freeman, as our organ, so far as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. currency.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet —

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

THE Universal Phonographer,
ORGAN OF THE
American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a JOURNAL of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing. Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
PROVINCIAL FREEMAN
And Weekly Advertiser.

The Provincial Freeman will be devoted to Anti-Slavery, Emigration, Temperance and General Literature. The organ of no particular Political Party, it will open its columns to the views of men of different political opinions, reserving the right, as an independent Journal, of full expression on all questions or projects affecting the people in a political way; and reserving, also, the right to express emphatic condemnation of all projects, having for their object in a great or remote degree, the subversion of the principles of the British Constitution, or of British rule in the Provinces.

Not committed to the views of any religious sect exclusively, it will carefully observe the rights of every sect, at the same time that a reservation shall be made in favor of an existing difference of opinion, as to the views or actions of the sects respectively.

As an advertising medium, as a vehicle of information on Agriculture,—and as an enemy to vice in any and every conceivable form and a promoter of good morals, it shall be made worthy of the patronage of the public.

SPIRIT OF FREEDOM.

I come, on the breath of morning I haste,
From the dewy mead and the desert waste,
From the tiny flower that wakes at morn;
On the zephyr's wings I am gently borne,
From the voice of the carolling bird I come,
In the breast of each freeman I make my home

From the verdant fields, the bleating flocks,
The vale, the hills, and the craggy rocks,
From the towering pine that cradles the wind,
The thick-woven forest that shelters the hind;
From the lofty Green Mountains I come, I come.
In the breast of each freeman I make my home.

I come from the rill, the river, the main,
In the cataract flow I'm re-echoed again;
I come in the voice of the tempest dark,
I come in the lightning's vived spark;
On the wings of the fleeting winds I come,
In the breast of each freeman I make my home.

I come in the Pilgrim's voice once more,
In the waves that lash Plymouth's rock-bound shore;
I come from the fields with the battle made red,
I come from the grave of the veteran dead;
From Vernon's Mount with tears I come;
In the breast of each freeman I crave a home.

Yea I come from the isles of the fathomless sea,
I come on the winds so tameless and free,
I come from the hand that created the sod,
I come at the gloricus mandate of God,
From the mighty God, in his voice I come.
In the breast of each freeman I make my home.

He that created from darkness the light,
Created and holds me in the power of his might;
No tyrant can tame me; might fetter as soon
The whirlwind wild, or hot simoon!
In the power of his might I come, I come,
Till creation is mine, my limitless home.

PUSH ON.

Push on! You're rusting while you stand;
Inaction will not do;
Take life's small bundle in your hand,
And trudge it briskly through.

Don't blush because you have a patch
In honest labor won;
There's many a small cot roofed with thatch
Is happier than a throne.

THE CITY OF ROME.

No city, no spot indeed on the surface of the earth, if it be not the tomb of our Saviour can stir the heart like Rome. A man may prefer to live in Paris or at his own home for years and years, but, for that deep moving of the feelings, that crowding thick and fast of the memories of the past, that overwhelming press of emotion which is excited at every step, and which actually bewilder the beholder by their number, their magnitude, and their importance, there is no spot at all comparable to Rome. I do not hesitate to affirm that three weeks there are worth more than any other period of the same duration of a litetime. Each object is worthy of a pilgrimage, and compensates for all the toil of long journeys by sea and land. The locality itself, the sacred precincts with not a stone standing, so throngs with the souveniers of the mighty past, is so potent in invoking the spirit and the recollection of other days, and of a great people, that without the Pantheon, without the Coliseum or the Forum, there were enough, not merely to satisfy, but to overwhelm the spectator. He that has enjoyed the privilege of standing upon the soil amid the half-buried relics of the "Lone Mother of Dead Empires," should never be allowed to let fall from his lips a word of complaint in after life. He has already exhausted all the impressions which objects of this nature can produce, He has had his triumph, and he need not again go elsewhere in quest of that delicious excitement which is evoked by the associations which the history of other ages and nations give rise to. There he reveals in antiquity; the finest specimens which lay upon the surface of the globe are there collected for him within those hallowed walls, and in one moment he can imbibe the concentrated aroma of two thousand years of time—twenty centuries, during the lapse of which a magnificent empire and a marvelous people sprang into life, flourished, and faded away. In this time, too, no other nation ever expanded so large—made such astonishing progress, or left such traces of their grandeur or their civilization. I stand to-day in the Capital, in the centre of this old power which stretches its arms out to the embrace of half the known earth, and from which, as from some great heart, it sent out life and nourishment to remotest distances. Into this little area on the banks of a muddy river, surrounded on all sides by a flat and sterile plain, passed the great articles of trade, and poured all the wealth of a hundred empires; and from it issued the spirit and the influence which commanded and enforced tribute, and gave dominion over mere numbers or brute force. Here resided the mind and the science directing the wealth which subjected and guided every thing exterior to it. The moral and physical, supplied by knowledge and education and concentrated here, made up in reality the elements from which Rome drew her resources, and these in her hand gave easy mastery over untrained and less cultivated antagonists. With these she spread and fired an electric chain which comprised the known earth in its circuit, and which ramifying in every direction, the most distant dependancy—the peasant of the Caucasus, as well as the savage of Great Britain—felt its life-giving impulse, and a disturbance at the Capital shocked the entire fabric and its fibres ceased to throb and quiver only as they lost themselves in those far-off regions to which the foot of the Roman had never penetrated.

But amid these ruins and during this period so rich in instruction, so fertile in great events, which left ineffaceable footprints, and which continue even now to impress and modify the character of the nations of to-day with scarce less power than they acted upon those contemporaneous with them, there existed something more than arts and arms. Then and here sprang also into life and was matured, that language, learning, and literature which, born of a Grecian mother, was nourished on this fresh and virgin soil and in this genial clime. With such harbingers to its birth—amongst a people acting great events—fed by a Mythology imaginative and romantic in the extreme—is it wonderful that in Poetry and Eloquence, in breathing Statuary and in harmonious forms, they scarce find an equal and none surpass them; that the classics which the genius of this people here produce twenty centuries since, the marbles the chiseled, and the structures they reared, have only been approached by that which imitating ten centuries later of their disinterred relics gave rise to? And now, when eighteen hundred years have rolled by, the eyes must still be directed towards Rome, and the feet must pass over the Campagna in quest of the master-pieces either of ancient or modern times. There still lives and reigns there now as then supremely, the same potent influence which confers power to create things excellent above all others of their kind. Rome has that spell of enchantment which raises often even her humblest denizen to the conception of her greatness, and to the appreciation of her wonderous marvels. Whether it be the memory of her heroic acts, the constant mementoes of her memorable deeds, the deep blue of her sky, the splendor of her sunsets, the influences of her delicious climate, one finds in her limits and breathes in the atmosphere which surrounds her, an inspiration not elsewhere felt, and St. Peters, the "Last Judgement," Raphael, Michael Angelo, the painters and architects, and the three great epics of modern times, prove that in Italy alone reside those influences which nourish their authors equally new as she nourished once Cicero, Horace, Virgil, and her countless lines of worthies, whether in poetry and song, in philosophy, eloquence, or many of those high faculties which constitutes the greatness of a people.

HINTS TO EMIGRANTS.

A Letter to Working People who Propose Going West.

BY A CO-WORKER.

PART FIRST.

Reader,—Having acquired considerable experience in Western life, during a residence of nearly twenty years in Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa, and observing that emigration for these and other Western States and Territories is receiving a new impulse, I have thought best to address this epistle to my fellow-workingmen, in the hope of rendering some slight service to such of them as are about settling in these vast agricultural regions.

You need not expect a geopraphical or geological description of the great West, as I am not competent to such an undertaking, and I presume you do not wish for it, and would not be so well pleased as you will with what I shall write.

I am often asked for the best place to go to, or settle in, in the West. There is no best place; so you might as well make up your mind where you will stop before you start, if your object is to settle down at once, and there commence the foundation of your future home.

I said there is no best place; simply because, taking townships, counties, States, and, for aught I know, Territories, and there is but little to choose between them. The whole West is, as it were, a vast garden, with scarcely any waste land, with so little variety in scenery, soil and productions as to render it rather tame and monotonous. This, I think, is the general rule, though there are exceptions. There are places, too, which I should prefer above some others, but what would be my choice might not be the choice of the majority; still, we should doubtless think alike upon some points: for instance, none of us would choose or prefer a situation where mosquitoes and ague prevailed. And if one builds in the high open prairie, with no fields, low trees, or much shrubbery close to their dwelling, so as to impede the free circulation of the air, the prospect for health and freedom from mosquitoes is better than many places in the older States. But to say that you are not rather more liable to bilious attacks on that rich alluvial soil, than you would be in a mountainous, sterile country, is contrary to my experience. But with the precaution that I have and may suggest, your prospect for health, on the whole, taking all diseases, is just about as good as in the more eastern States, with this exception, perhaps—I think a majority of persons would enjoy better health by remaining near their native place. The climate, soil and productions of one's native country are more in harmony with their organizations than a foreign and dissimilar one can be. This is natural. If one is more liable to bilious complaints West, I think they are compensated somewhat by being less liable to cattarrh and pulmonary affections. Colds are not as common, and are not prolonged as in the Eastern States, but they are equally as severe while they last, and not unfrequently terminate fatally, in fever or pneumonia.

Long, drizzling rain-storms are not common, as, usually, when it rains it comes in showers, and they are generally accompanied with thunder and lightning, not unfrequently of the most terrific kind; especially in the rainy season, which usually commences in May and ends in June, and in which more rain usually falls than in the rest of the year. So the farmer should have his corn planted the first of May, so that it may get up and have one ploughing before the rainy season sets in, which is generally near the middle of the month. Though this is by no means a uniform description of the weather, still, I have observed it to be a very safe rule in planting.

I might as well make some further remarks here, not only on corn-raising but all or various other productions. In raising corn, plant it as close as you can; if cultivated with horse and plough, do not have the hills more than three and a half feet apart—less, if possible; put plenty of seed in the hill, but thin out so as to leave but two or three stalks to the hill, and see that every hill has its complement, because you will have to plough all alike, even if one-half of your hills or stalks are missing; and where you do not raise a crop of grain, Nature will raise a crop of weeds. She seems to be opposed to nakedness, and determined to clothe the earth with something. Therefore, whatever you plant, be it corn, vines, or any thing else, plant close, so that when up the earth will soon be shaded: then nature seems satisfied, weeds will not grow, and if your plants are too thick, you can easily thin out, which, if you expect a crop, must be done judiciously and thoroughly, as they grow. Beginners often miss on this point; when plants are young and growing finely, five or six in a hill, looking so fresh and vigorous, it does seem almost wasteful to pull out half or more; but spare them not, if you want good corn, melons, beets, &c.

In going to a new country, take no nice articles of furniture, crockery, or glass kind. Fine clothing, jewellery, musical instruments, and what silver-ware you can afford, you might as well have them there as elsewhere; if they give you pleasure here, I am sure they would there; but take nothing that is easily broken, or requires tight dry rooms to preserve it in, for it will cause you more trouble than pleasure, as the care of it is so great.

Take plenty of the common dry goods—blankets, sheetings, shirtings, and goods for common clothing, and such tools of a good quality as you may have on hand, or can get very cheap; for you can get all such things as tools and hardware, stoves and farming implements, as cheap on the Mississippi river at and above St. Louis as this side of the mountains.

A hand-mill, too, would be an excellent article to take, for sometimes you can get corn and wheat when and where you can not get flour or meal.

If possible, every adult person should also take a small canvas house or tent, say six by twelve feet, so constructed that it can be easily tied up. It should be good and strong, so that one can sleep and keep their clothing and other personal matters in it. Where a company or large family are together, these little houses would be very desirable, especially to those who have been accustomed to have separate rooms, and it is particularly desirable where there are both sexes, which, if possible, should be the case, as this seems to be the natural course; and what is natural I reckon must be about right. I do not approve of the plan of having men go out and live in the wilds alone, without females. I see many reasons against it, and none in favor of such an unnatural course. No; let man's helper go with him and share in the toils and pleasures of erecting a new home, which are neither few nor need be particularly disagreeable.

A large tent, too, I think would be an excellent thing for a company or several families to take, especially should they be going so far out that lumber could not be had conveniently. Tent-cloth would always be useful until fairly worn out, should it last until you had built good houses and barns, and even after that, for covering thrashed grain, and to erect in harvest-fields for shelter. By the way, I am surprised that tents are not more used now for this very purpose in the settled parts of the West. I do think it would be a matter of health and economy. A good strong tent or canvas house would answer some time for a dwelling. I should prefer it in many respects to an ordinary log-house, which of all human habitations that I have ever seen or had anything to do with is the least desirable, and about one of the hardest and most expensive in constructing, especially if made neat and comfortable. In short, I would try every conceivable way of building before I would use logs. The reasons are unanswerable, and almost innumerable, when I would do it.

I have had some experience in this manner of building, and perhaps, after all that I could say, you would not be satisfied but by learning the same way. If so, go ahead; you may be satisfied with the result. There are many, doubtless, who do like log cabins, but were I now going West, I would sooner take a canvas house, or perhaps several small ones or rooms, that could be securely tied together to a light frame. For a large tent or house it seems to me that the hexagon form would be economical and comfortable; one of thirty-six feet in diameter would contain seven rooms, six around the seventh central one, and not a foot of waste canvas or room. I would use no waterproof or fire-proof preparation on the canvas, as it causes it to crack and makes it much heavier; consequently, it will not last as long, and adds materially to the expense. Should your canvas not be thick enough to keep out wet and cold, line or double it.

By all means take all kinds of fruit-seeds or stones, especially should you go to the border of civilization; and whatever else you neglect, do not neglect them. Put them in the ground at the proper time, and watch them with care, as health and wealth will flow to you from their culture and use. Just heed what I am now saying, and act up to it; don't say, my neighbor is going largely into the business, and will supply us all. Don't leave this matter to your neighbor, any more than you would to supply your daily wants; for should he go into the business, there will be room enough for you and him too.

A few quarts of fruit-seeds, properly attended to, will lay the foundation of a fortune in any new country where fruit will grow. Had I followed the advice which I now give you, when I first went West, I might now have been sitting under my own trees and vines, with an abundance around me, instead of being a poor wandering journeyman mechanic, without home or trees, except hired ones.

After having bought your land, look around for berry bushes and vines. Set out all you can of those, and with good care they will soon furnish you the most desirable, healthful, and consequently important food you and your family can have, especially if eaten in their natural state and fully ripe.

I hardly think one could get sick, if good ripe strawberries, raspberries, and blackberries, with good coarse bread, were their main articles of food in the summer months. Especially if they did not work hard in the hot sun, and were correct and regular in all other habits.

Use no milk with fruits, and the least of it you use the better. I am confident that its almost universal use at the West is one of the main causes of the bilious diseases which are said to be so prevalent there, but which, by the way, are not near so numerous as Eastern people suppose; but whatever there are of them have a cause for their existence, and among these causes I do think milk stands pre-eminent. It is milk, milk, morning, noon, and night, with many families, especially in the summer, when plenty. Milk, hot dodger, light biscuit, and fried bacon in the morning. Milk, with boiled smoked pork and greens or beans, cabbage and corn, at noon. Coffee, hot biscuit and butter, chicken, and milk for supper. I do not wish to ridicule any one's food, but I must say this kind of living never did agree well with me, and I do believe that it is not the food best adapted to stomachs in general.

But the question naturally arises, What shall we eat? or what would be the best food for settlers in a new country like the West? As far as possible use that kind of food you have been accustomed to, that agreed well with your organization. And gradually make all changes in your diet, so that the system will receive no sudden revolution; for revolutions are generally destructive and tend to discord, for the time being, at least, politically and socially, as well as physically, though they are sometimes necessary and ultimately tend to harmony.

A very safe diet, if you are accustomed to a mixed one, which most of us are, is wild game, good bread, dried apples and peaches; all of which can generally be got anywhere within a reasonable distance of the Mississippi river or its navigable tributaries. And most of the season you will find a great variety of vegetables that are well adapted to give you health and strength, without the flesh of domestic animals, or milk, which are both more or less diseased, and the latter not adapted to the stomachs of any but the unweaned.

As to health among the native population West, I think it will compare favorably with the older States, especially in the open prairie country, and where a large proportion of vegetable food and fruits are used. I do insist that it is of the first importance that the young especially should have an abundance of the pleasant acid of fruits, berries, &c., and there can be no good reason why one should not have them by the second year, in the meantime raising an abundance of tomatoes and melons: and do not fear to make a free use of them, especially if the appetite should crave them, in sickness or health. I would hardly dare say so much in regard to fruits and their free use by children, had I not reared children there; and with my experience, I certainly feel that I have not said too much. And I do think one is much more likely to be sick when the food consists principally of the flesh of domestic animals, (particularly hogs), milk, and eggs.

After all it is not the food alone that causes all the sickness. Too much labor and care is another cause of sickness, especially to those who have had everything about them convenient and agreeable: and woman, particularly suffers, for by her constitution and training she can not as well adapt herself to the inconveniences of a new country; hence the sickness is more common and more fatal among them than it is among men.

But much of this sickness, care and toil might be avoided if men would not attempt to do so much. Everything is on a large scale at the West, especially prairies and rivers; and the farmer who has been confined to little fields of from two to five acres of rough, sterile, stony land, has his ideas wonderfully expanded when he gets on to the creamy soil of the prairies, and immediately goes on the other extreme, and attempts to enclose entirely too much, especially when he has so many other things to do—house to build, well to dig, &c., &c. He attempts to do entirely too much, with his force and means: the consequence is toil, care, sickness, and short crops.

Keep within your means; far better do too little than too much; but whatever you undertake, do it right. And by all means do not fail to purchase a piece of land and pay for it all down, though it may not be more than an acre for each member of your family. And to mechanics I would say: Do not think that you will better your condition by going West and depending entirely upon your trades for a support, without getting you a home of your own; as you will do no better there than in the Eastern States, as a general thing, and all over the country, both East and West, you will find men who have tried it and found it so. But by all means get you a few acres of land; not merely a town lot or two, but a spot large enough to produce what you would consume; so, if business is dull, or prices too low at your trades, you can cultivate the soil, and thereby retain that independence which is so agreeable and so essential to the true dignity and happiness of man. And if you have not means to get such a place near a large town or city, go where you can get it. Do not think you must huddle together in order to live. This crowding up in towns and cities is no doubt a fruitful cause of crime, poverty, and sickness, and surely there is no need of it at the West, for you can get a good living almost anywhere by work enough to keep in good health.

Agricultural, &c.

Why Gardens are More Permanently Productive than Farm Fields.

The possibility of rendering farm grounds intended for cereal crops, as permanently fertile as well-managed gardens usually are, is strongly insisted on by many writers. To the unreflecting farmers, their reasoning appears sound and sensible: but the difficulties in the way of securing the promised fertility are incomprehensible. He ploughs deep, pulverises thoroughly, manures heavily, and yet, strange to tell, he cannot succeed in producing more than two, or, at farthest, three successive good crops of the same cereal on the same field. He finds a great deterioration both in quantity and quality, and finally abandons the theory, with a mind fully satisfied of the impracticability of rendering his fields productive for a long succession of cereal crops of the same kind. This seeming mystery is not so difficult of solution.

"All, or nearly all know plants impoverish the soil, principally during the period of their forming and maturing their seeds: and the cereal grasses owe their chief exhausting effects to the fact of their being grown mainly for the sake of their seeds."

The products of the garden, on the other hand, are grown for a different purpose. But few are permitted to run to seed, nearly all being cultivated for the succulent character of their leaves, stems or roots, and are generally removed from the soil at a stage of their growth when they carry away with them but little of the fertility which has not been drawn from the water and atmosphere. In addition to this, gardens are much more frequently and thoroughly pulverized and manured than fields intended for clerical crops, and as a consequence, a greater amount of chemical action, and more complete aeration are secured. After wheat is sown, but a trifling amount of further cultivation is practicable. The same may be said of rye, oats, barley, &c. Corn admits of, and indeed requires attention after planting, but the fields in which wheat and rye are sown, must necessarily be permitted to rest for nearly a twelve-month form the time of seeding, while the products of the garden, as a general thing, being required for the table before arriving at perfect maturity, are removed, the soil from which they are taken is re-dug, re-pulverized and re-manured twice or thrice during the same period, and thus, all the requisites of permanent fertility are brought to bear upon it.

Large and Small Trees.

We have had some experience in transplanting both kinds, taken from the nurseries. There is no more risk in removing a pear or apple tree, four or five years from the bud, than one year from it. We are persuaded that we have lost three years by setting small trees where we might have set large. The large apple trees from Dyer's nursery, that we put out two years ago, have made as much wood as smaller ones. Some of them have blossomed, and the apples set both years, and as they are full of fruit buds, we look for a sample of their fruit next season.

It may not generally be known that large sized apple trees, say two or three inches from the butt, cost no more than the smallest size. Nurserymen, if they have a large stock on hand, have no other resource than to cut and burn them, as they grow beyond the proper size for transplanting, so that they are glad to dispose of them at that price. Large pear trees, especially those upon quince, are most expensive. We have purchased some, nine years old this fall, at two dollars each, and consider it much better economy than to pay 50 cts. for trees two years from the bud. They are as safely moved, and will soon bear abundantly. If any of our readers are about to set an apple orchard, we are confident they will find it for their interest to order large trees. Let them dig large holes, and put in compost liberally, and they will soon have fruit.

Fine Apple Jelly.—Take a half bushel of good pippin, bell-flower, or other fair sub-acid fruit, carefully cut out all blemishes, and without peeling or coring, quarter them, and throw them as they are cut into a pan of cold water, to preserve the color. When all the apples are thus prepared, take them out of the water, and without wiping or drying them, add to every pound of the fruit one pound of best loaf or crushed sugar, put all together into a large preserving-kettle, with water barely sufficient to keep them from burning, and mix among them the rind of half-a-dozen lemons, cut into very small pieces, together with the juice of the same. Boil the mass as rapidly as possible, without burning, until the apples become perfectly soft, or boiled to a mash; then put the whole into a jelly-bag, and if wanted for immediate use, run the liquid into moulds; but if intended for, keeping, run it into jars in the usual manner. Jelly made by the above method will be beautifully transparent, and delicious to the tast, and presents to the connoisseur one of the richest delicacies of the season.

Lime Water in Making Bread.

In bread-making, the vinous fermentation sometimes passes into the acid, thus rendering the bread sour and disagreeable. Leibeg has lately performed a series of experiments to improve the preparation of bread, from which he comes to the conclusion, that the only effective and innocuous means of improving the qualities of wheat and rye bread, is lime water. In making dough he advises one pint of clear lime water to be used for every five pounds of flour. The lime water is first added to the flour, after which a sufficient quantity of common water is added to work the whole into good common dough; the leaven being mixed with water can be prepared by stirring some quick lime in a vessel containing pure cold water, then allowing the sediment to settle. The clear is then poured off and kept in bottles for use. No care is required respecting the quantity of lime to be stirred in the water, as it will only take up a certain quantity of lime, and no more. Those who use saleratus [bicarbonate of soda] in the raising of bread, are recommended to cease its use, and employ poor baker's yeast, and a little lime water. Our bones are composed of the phosphate of lime, and those who use fine flour require for their health a little more lime than is contained in the food. Cream of tartar and carbonate of soda are inferior to common yeast for making healthy bread.—Scientific American.

Anthony Burns a Freeman.

By the exertions of the Rev. Mr. Grimes, of Boston, the sum of $70 was raised in that city towards purchasing the person of Anthony Burns, the returned Fugitive Slave. The remainder of the sum necessary for that purpose, ($600,) was furnished by Mr Grimes himself, and the purchase was concluded by that gentleman the other day at Barnum's Hotel, in Baltimore. On Friday evening Anthony, accompanied by his friend, Mr. Grimes, was publicly received in Dr. Pennington's Church, in this city, by numerous friends of his own color, and a number of white friends of Freedom.

The Rev. Mr. Raymond opened the meeting with prayer, after which the Rev. Dr. Pennington introduced to the audience Anthony Burns. Anthony is a man of medium height, not very dark skin, regular features, high forehead, a quiet, intelligent face, and a well-set and muscular frame. The only mark on him was a broad dark scar on his left cheek. In a modest, but firm and deep voice, he said:

My Friends: I am very glad to have it to say, to have it to feel, that I am once more in the land of liberty; that I am with those who are my friends. Until my tenth year I did not care much what came of me, but soon after I began to learn that there is a Christ who came to make us free; I began to hear about a North, and to feel the necessity for freedom of soul and body. [Applause.] I heard of a North, where men of my color could live without any man daring to say to them, "You are my property;" and I determined, by the blessing of God, one day to find my way there. My inclination grew on me, and I found my way to Boston. You see, I didn't want to make myself known, so I didn't tell who I was; but as I came to work, I got employment, and I worked hard; but I kept my own counsel, and didn't tell anybody that I was a slave, but I strove for myself as I never had an opportunity to do before. When I was going home one night I heard some one running behind me; presently a hand was put upon my shoulder, and somebody said: "Stop, stop; you are the fellow who broke into a silversmith's shop the other night." I assured the man that it was a mistake, but almost before I could speak I was lifted off from my feet by six or seven others, and it was no use to resist. In the Court-House I waited some time, and, as the silversmith did not come, I told them I wanted to go to supper.

A man then came to the door; he didn't open like an honest man, would [laughter,] kind a slowly opened it, and looked in. He said, "How do you do, Mr. Burns?" and I, called him, as we do in Virginia, "master!" He asked me if there would be any trouble in taking me back to Virginia, I was brought right to a stand, and didn't know what to say. He wanted to know if I remembered the money he used to give me, and I said, "Yes, I do recollect that you used to give me 12½ cents at the end of every year, I worked for you." He went out and came back next morning. I got no supper nor sleep that night. The next morning they told me that my master said he had the right to me; and as I called him "master," having the fear of God before my eyes, I could not go from it. Next morning I was taken down with bracelets on my wrists—not such, as you wear, ladies, of gold and silver—but iron and steel that wore into the bone. [He showed the marks which his irons had made.] The lawyers insisted that I should have counsel, but I told them I didn't think it would do any good, for what I had first said had crushed me, and I could not deny the truth, and my only hope was in the assistance of Heaven. He proceeded to relate how the officers were armed in the Court-Room; and how the United States officials told him that Dana, Ellis, Phillips were d—d sons of b—s of Abolitionists; that he would be freed when he got back to Virginia, and advised him to have nothing to do with those who pretended to befriend him while they made his case worse. He replied that they worked for him manfully, and if they did not succeed it was not their fault. He said he saw in a newspaper that he had said he wished to go back to Virginia. Had the Devil himself said it, he could have told no greater lie. He then described the scene of his rendition; how he, a poor fugitive was made a great lion, and escorted out of the City of Boston and on board of the revenue cutter, amid troops of men armed to the teeth. How they (the law and order men) promised to purchase him when he got to Virginia, and when they got him to Norfolk they clapped him in jail, and put irons on his wrist, and kept him in a room without bed or seat, and with but scanty food, for two days. He was taken to Richmond, where he was kept in a little pen in the Traders' Jail for four months, with irons on his wrists and ancles, so tight that they wore the flesh through the bone, and during the month of August they gave him a half-pailful of water every two days. From this cell he was not allowed to come out once during four months; at the end of that time he was sold to one David McDaniel, who took him to North Carolina.

The remainder of his story is short; hearing of his situation, the money was raised and his purchase effected by Mr. Grimes.

The address was listened to with great interest, and was much applauded.

The Rev. Mr. Grimes followed, after which a collection was taken up. Burns has gone on to Boston.

Losing Confidence.

I confess that the developments of the past year have very much diminished my confidence in the speedy enfranchisement of the colored race in this country. If in Massachusetts, the hot-bed of Abolitionism, where so much has been said and written on the subject of Slavery, twenty-five or thirty thousand voters, who had espoused the cause of the slave, have received no better idea of the genius of our institutions and of the principles of Liberty, than to be ready to rob men of rights essential to the perpetuity of free institutions, is it not evident that we shall be liable to continual betrayal and defeat, until there is a better understanding of the subject, in its various bearings, by those who claim to be its friends, and more firm and vigorous action in its behalf?

Wonderful Power of Endurance.—On the 31st ult., a young man named Copp, became lost, after night, in the White Mountains of New Hampshire. The thermometer, at the time, was 32 deg. below zero; and to keep from freezing to death, he continued to walk for 21 hours, when he came out on Wild River, where he found his father and several friends in search of him.

Native Californians Leaving the State.

We learn that a most important movement is at present contemplated by the native Californians. This is no less than a total abandonment of this state, with the view of settling in the State of Sonora. A meeting of native Californians was held on Wednesday night in this city, at which Governor Alvarado is said to have presided, and Senor Casanueva to have acted as secretary. The object was to devise means for a wholesale emigration of native Californians to Senora. Several speeches were made, in which it was shown that by reason of the law's delay—of the invasion of the squatters—of burdensome taxes—and of other multitudinous oppressions, the native Californians, without any fault of theirs, are rapidly being reduced to beggary on the soil they once owned and enjoyed uninterruptedly; that the lands their fathers held, and which they expected would descend to their posterity for ever, are now wrested from them on some quibble raised by a thievish attorney—that they are kept in doubt for years whether their claims will be confirmed or rejected—that they are required to pay onerous taxes on lands while the same laws which imposed those taxes permit squatters to occupy and enjoy; that they are treated as aliens on the soil on which they were born; and finally that there is no such thing as justice to be expected in California. It was represented at the meeting that there would be no difficulty in obtaining grants of land in Sonora from the Mexican government, and that to remain longer here, involves absolute ruin, it is better to seek an asylum where at least they would not be regarded as aliens and as a convenient prey for any ruffian who might covet their lands and houses. A committee was appointed to devise means for carrying into effect the purpose of the meeting, and this committee is to report at a meeting to be held one or two evenings hence. This movement is a sad commentary on the manner in which justice is dealt to the natives of California.

Sandwich Islands.—We have received files of the Polynesian to Jan. 13. The funeral of the king took place on the 10th. The procession was by far the most imposing ever witnessed in the islands. On the 11th the new king made his first appearance, and attended a council. The king addressed his native subjects and also the foreigners From the speech to the latter we extract the following: "I therefore say to the foreigner, that he is welcome to our shores—welcome so long as he comes with the laudable motive of promoting his interests, and at the same time respecting those of his neighbor. But if he comes here with no more exalted motive than that of building up his own interests at the expense of the natives, to seek our confidence only to betray it; with no higher ambition than that of overthrowing our government, and introducing anarchy, cofusion and bloodshed, then he is most unwelcome." There had been much rain in the islands and extensive preparations were making for planting.

To Correspondents.

Do write more legibly, friends; many of your communications will have to pass unnoticed. Did we know how to set types, not one of your crabbed characters would we try to decipher—it is a clear waste of money. Neither will we ask of printers to perform such impossibilities.

To the many complaints about not receiving the paper, one answer only can be given—the paper is sent regularly from this office. Parties in Hamilton and the Western States are assured that the Postmasters in their respective places must be importuned without ceasing, as they know of their arrival. At this time dozens, probably hundreds of this paper may be found in the Office at Hamilton, and other towns. We have gotten out papers at the last named place, for parties who had been repeatedly refused. Whose fault is it?

PROVINCIAL FREEMAN.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1855.

One of the many things that in the outset we knew it would be difficult to do, would be to get up a paper so perfect in its details as to please everybody. We were sure that such an attempt would prove a failure; and experience has confirmed our convictions. Did a measure of approbation cheer us from one quarter, disapprobation would follow swiftly on from another. Were friend A satisfied that measures advocated were right, friend B would be equally satisfied that they were wrong. Did one like selections, another would have more correspondence, and vice versa. But it was no part of our thought that preference would be carried out into such special details as to dictate terms to be used, or impute to us terms contributed by others, or when used as objectors would apply them. But so it is.

Latterly, strong objection has been made to the word negro in our columns. Men smarting from the use of it as insultingly applied to them in the United States, go so far as even to counsel its removal from selected matter. We wish it were possible to accede to their demand in this and every other particular, for though proper enough in its general application to the natives of Central Africa, it can have no significance when used to designate colored Americans; and yet it cannot be wholly avoided. We like the term "Colored," because, to our mind, that tells the whole story; besides, it is more in keeping with the identity in interest and pursuits of the human family. It includes the black, the white, the brown, the red, the yellow, and their varieties—the terms white, black, &c., are not comprehensive enough to our mind; and the term negro, like the term white, cannot include varieties of the same class; as, for example, the Indian and the European, the African, and the colored American of almost entire European ancestry. We know that just at this time, some colored men of the States are making efforts to bring the term into repute by adopting it, and adapting it to their peculiar theory of nationality; but like other movements in a wrong direction, that too must fail. From Africa must the vindication of the name come, and that by means of the laws that promote successful measures of progress, not by any sponsorship of colored Americans, whether as Yankees or British subjects. The people of that country will have to do what has not yet been done—give the word a good character; and no people can, by adopting it, have a great reputation conferred upon them. When we have occasion to use it, it shall be in future as has been hitherto, not as of choice, but showing the application of it by enemies, or the mistaken kindness of friends.

☞ Melancholy Accident.—We regret to learn that a boy about six years of age, son of Mr. Skelly, grocer, Queen St, was drowned by falling into a creek which runs under Beverly St., on Thursday evening last. The current being very rapid, the child was carried under a house on John Street before any assistance could be rendered to save his life. Although every effort was made to recover the body that night, it was not found until next morning.

Lectures.

The citizens of Toronto have had, during the past week, more than ordinary opportunities to become indoctrinated into some of the leading reforms now becoming so popular elsewhere. The Rev. Mr. Nazrey held forth to a numerous congregation on Monday evening, on the condition and prospects of aliened Americans. The lecture throughout was a sensible expose of the workings of American despotism against the colored man of this continent, and a faithful delineation of the characteristics of those affected by it.

The apathy, jealousies, cross-purposes, general want of harmony, and determined stand in direct opposition to what is clearly their true interests, were dwelt upon in so faithful, unpretending, though decided a manner, as to secure the appreciation, if not the approval of all present. One great subject of regret is, that the colored citizens of Toronto should so seldom attend lectures, whether the meetings are called by those of their own number, or others. It would be well for them to meet oftener, to look in the face the cause of present discords and former antagonisms, and endeavor to do away with the just imputation of "division, ignorance, disunion, love of menial occupations, and the like," that however much we may regret it, can be and is brought against them with so much force every day. Why, with the abundant opportunities surrounding us—the schools, churches, associations and lectures—need the sad spectacle our people here present be persisted in by them. Now, it is folly to take offence; the condition of things here is well known by others and lamented over, and wisdom will be shown more certainly by working to bring about a change than by indifference. In the course of his remarks, allusion was made to prejudice in Canada, and we did wish that our anti-emigration friends could have availed themselves of the many unmistakable cases enumerated, if only to have an excuse for their theory beyond bare assertions, unsupported by positive facts. The speaker had a supply on hand, but though deprecating their existence, very properly concluded not to be driven from home by such trifles.

Besides the lecture alluded to, and other meetings of a reformatory character during the week, Miss Lucy Stone, of the United States, has, as will be seen by extracts from other papers, held forth to crowded audiences on the subject of "Woman's Rights," or, as very successfully shown by Miss Stone, Human Rights. It would be presumption in us to attempt an opinion on these lectures, apart from the intrinsic importance of the subject considered. Miss Stone's reputation, as a talented woman and an orator, is too well known. Her numerous admirers will take hope, however, in the certainty that in Toronto, with the strong attachment to antiquated notions respecting woman and her sphere, so prevalent, she was listened to patiently, applauded abundantly, and patronised extensively—the St. Lawrence Hall being literally packed; and better, the cry of "brigadier," "virago," and other soft epithets which invited her approach, were "heard no more for ever." All we were disappointed at was, that then, too, so few of the colored people seized upon the occasion to learn lessons of practical wisdom.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Gaines on "Submission," or an Anti-Emigrationist Reviewed.

"I dare do all that becomes a man,
Who dares do more is none"

Shakespeare.

No. II.

Messrs. Editors,—It is our province to stand to the very letter of the law, and to it we take an appeal, and deny Mr. Gaines the right of any private interpretation, beyond its own statements. The laws of the States are no ways delicate in expressing their restriction upon the privileges and immunities of the colored man; we must not then disguise the shameful fact that stains with disgrace the statutes and national escutcheon of this country—that deep rooted prejudice against colored persons. If our condition be revolting to the humane feelings of the American, and the fact be that we originated from Slavery, European countries can make no difference in the origin, or our national condition. Why did our friend, Mr. Gaines, refer to the sight which was so disgusting to the American nature of Mr. John Brachman? It weakens his argument. Had it not been for the color of the gentlemen he saw in Europe, he would not have known they were Americans. It was not their condition which was so disgusting to his finer feelings, for they were gentlemen, and with ladies; but they were colored. Again—is not the condition of the colored man known in the European States as well as here? Yea, better than the people of these States are willing to admit. We have their sympathies in our oppressed condition. It is the pretence of the Americans to sympathise with the oppressed people of the world, and to hold the hand of fellowship to those oppressed by any despotic country of Europe. Not long since, they were thrown into the highest state of excitement upon the receipt of intelligence of Martin Kosta's imprisonment in Austria; he was known in America as the slave of a monarch by birth, and at the time of his release, by Captain Ingraham, was in a deplorable situation, being guarded as the people would a fugitive here, in far-famed Cincinnati, in which our friend will set us an example, of the liberal feelings which the people hold, by aspiring to and succeeding in getting to be even a night sentinel. This Kosta's rescuer receives the approbation of the American people, and the act is hailed with joy and exultation, throughout the length and breadth of the country. Again, official intelligence was received here, during the past year, that a colored man wished the protection of this government, on the western part of this continent. The Consul was informed by our Executive officers, that colored persons were not considered citizens of this Government. Notice the expression, colored persons not considered citizens,—which case of the two deserves the protection of this Government? The one which is the most honorable, is met with indignant contempt by the American officials, and the people of the United States view it calmly, with a conscious indifference. Whilst I remain in Cincinnati, Mr. Gaines' fort against prejudice and American oppression, I shall be glad for him to practically illustrate his theory by a demonstration superior to his argument—of which I will duly inform you, should he—he will find in attempting to elevate himself with the white man, either by social, civil, or political merits, sadly defeated. The batteries of American oppression, which he may think impregnable, will destroy his bulwark.—There are public places here into which he cannot put his head, unless as a menial, although the most degraded white man can attend. One of his colleagues, in opposition to the great movement of the colored people, on the march of Emigration—the only route where elevation, honor, and true liberty awaits us—Mr. J. M. Langston, I speak of—in a speech in Cleveland, asserted that a colored man of science, learning, and industry, could gain, and would be as much respected here as the white man, and he would remain here in the United States after planting his "American tree." He would plant the seed, which might be called, and, indeed and in truth, is A-do-Nothing. After which he would raise the cheering sound and song of "A good time coming, boys," and would remain there, where the tree is planted at, I know not where, and work out his own salvation with fear and trembling, as all of our fathers did, but never arrived to the stature of men, and died before the seed germinated. But he anticipates its growth: it will grow, and the song he now sings will be re-echoed by our hopeful brethren in slavery, who will live as full of the faith as he is, although in the new slave State of Kansas, and die in despair. As I intend to inform you, he went to a public hall here, not a great while since, to hear a public lecture, but was prohibited, because he was colored, and invited out. Above all, in the laws and statutes of nine-tenths of the petty States occur the words Negroes, Mulattoes and Colored persons, we dislike to alter them.

California is now subjecting the Chinese to the enormous odium which has been engendered against colored people, and the Supreme Court of that State has decided, that they are included under the heads of Negroes, Mulattoes, Colored people, &c.

Whether the prejudice they have is against color or condition, it matters not, it will require seven times longer than this country has existed, as a Republic of despotism, to wipe out every black law upon the statutes, and will never until there is a civil revolution. The groans of the black man have ascended to God for vengeance against this iniquitous Government. The signs of the times speak thus: there is to be a reckoning with this Babylon of the world, the American Government!

Providence has, I believe, now taken our cause in hand; this mighty Despotism, the United States, has become drunk with her imaginary greatness; foreign troubles are gathering thick and fast; her encroachments have subjected her to the contempt of the world, and her hands dyed with the blood of one-seventh of her population, and the life blood of four millions. Yea, God is now preparing her desolation; there is a commotion in her borders, her churches and her States; division and discord have wasted her strength, even in her commencement; no one can tell where it will end. Think of millions of our brethren that have fallen beneath her iron grasp, and have gone through hardships, down to the grave in death, hand cuffed and bound in chains by American Slavery. And inasmuch as God has taken our cause in hand, it becomes us now to commence the work. Who, with a review of the past atrocities which have characterized her greatness, will dread the contest?

A California has caused a general emigration of the whites westward; and a Stephen A. Douglass has torn down the obstruction to American Slavery, introduced at Nebraska and Kansas, which the American Government is trying indirectly to secure to slavery: whilst they seek to acquire the island of Cuba, to enforce a more rigorous system of slavery, namely, American Slavery, which predestines its subjects eternal slaves to the last generation known among men.

And now, men of color—oh that I could say freemen!—it becomes us to stir up ourselves to an active work; the law of nature and nature's God is to help those only who help themselves. In this time of revolution, we must come out, as other people; the Canadas are now awaiting us, by the protection of an Almighty Being, as one point, where we can secure that which will never be gained here, until the American Government is burst into a thousand atoms. Are you willing to still bear these ills? Have you not experienced them too severely already? If you have not, I refer you to an ancestry that has. I feel them to-day, and have felt them all my life, and am sorry I was born a slave, under the American Government. Can you fly to ills more intolerable than these? None are experienced by man more heart-rending and burdensome. There is nothing truly great accomplished, unless an individual is subjected to ills; and if we intend to be truly great, whether in a civil or moral contest, we will have to contend with and triumph over every impediment.

What will we gain by remaining here? During the winter, I have seen, I think, hundreds of colored children idle, sliding with sleds. I heard a colored gentleman lamenting the prejudice that existed, and said that none of those boys, in this great Cincinnati, could serve an apprenticeship, at any respectable mechanical shop in the city, where white journeymen and boys were.

To-day, a large fire occurred—several engines were out. I saw two steam ones in operation; how I admired their movements! but my admiration was turned to sorrow, when I reflected that every one of my blood or color is proscribed to such an extent, that he dare not make a spike to drive in any of its parts or a bolt to keep it secure. Who would not, as it were, weep. Can the few men Mr. Gaines has named as being respected, represent the masses of 200,000 freemen, and even they living such an immense distance apart? They cannot assert, there are more foreigners, Irish and Germans, who have not been here 25 years, in office of Government, places of trust, professional business, &c., in this city, than he will find of colored men in the whole United States, who have been here by parentage for over two centuries. If we conclude and bear this, we need not expect more; we will stoop too low to gain the applause of men. In the language of our motto, we have done enough to entitle us to the rights of manhood, and if we will still stay here, attempting to do more, we will show we are not men. Where are the people now civilized, excepting us, that would be contented with our lot; we have never yet seen ourselves as others see us, or else I know there would be a different spirit than begging of this people a participation in the rights, which they have ever deprived us of. There is a mighty uprising of the people. Orators have failed to delude them, and they are preparing for the better, which they have so long hoped for. Yet there is to be gained a stand point, which we will make in Canada. We "must create an event, must make an issue," and demonstrate that we intend to achieve an honorable position. The signs of the times are bright, and pregnant with mighty events; the cause of Emigration is the cause of the people, as well as the cause of God; they are aware that their former hopes were delusive; none confess their freedom here, but when asked where the colored man is truly free, to the letter, by the Constitution, they point to Queen Victoria's free dominions. May God bless the Queen, and awake an oppressed people to their duty, inspire them with fortitude, that they may throw off the yoke that binds them, and that cowardly submission which too long has characterized us! In the language of the Cleveland Convention, "we will go where there are no prisons, nor court-houses, as slave pens and garrisons, nor mercenary gangs, who are bought as military on such occasions, to secure the fugitive. No perjured Marshalls, bribed Commissioners, nor hireling Council, who, spaniel-like, crouch at the feet of Southern Slaveholders, and cringingly tremble at the crack of their whips. The British Provinces, especially Canada West, in climate, soil, productions, and the usual prospects for internal improvements, are equal, if not superior, to any part of the Northern Continent. And for these very reasons, aside from their contiguity to the Northern part of the United States, and consequent facility for the escape of the slaves from the South, we certainly should prefer them as a place of destination. We love the Canadas, and admire their laws, because as British Provinces, there is no difference known among the people, no distinction of race, and we deem it a duty to recommend, it as certainly advisable for every colored person to emigrate to or locate in Canada West. Every advantage on our part should be now taken of the opportunity of obtaining lands, while they are to be had cheap, on the most easy conditions; "$20 will secure a homestead of 100 acres as the first instalment, and $16 per year until paid for at $1,50 per acre. Do not fear but trust in God!

Yours respectfully,

Samuel A. S. Lowery.

Emigration.

No. II.

Messrs. Editors,—According to promise, I embrace the opportunity presented by No. 3, to hunt out the prejudice that lurks around the borders of Canada. I have learned that in public houses, especially those of the picayune stamp, colored travellers meet with very slight receptions, if any. On getting into a stage, once or twice, within the last two years, colored gentlemen have met with resistance from upstart drivers. That there is also a worthless rabble constantly loitering around the groggeries and corners, near by which these infernal sinks are located, who are ready at any time to interfere with strangers, especially those whom they think will not retaliate. Suffice it to say, against all these things the law provides an adequate remedy, and the ill-treated man in Canada, whether white or black, can get redress. The contemptible wretch who called out "nigger," intending it as an insult to Mr. Gaines, violated a law which was made expressly for such as he; and the penalty of which Canadian loafers dread to pay. More than once I had heard a great deal about Canada abolitionists before I came to this country; but I have found but few in Toronto. I fear that the abolitionists here, like some we have in the States, are inclined to say more than they would be willing to do for the colored people. I trust, however, that their stentorian declarations may not turn out to be more sound than substance. It is due to a few individuals belonging to that body to say that they do as much for the emigrants and other poor of this city as we have right to expect of them.

Now, then, let the few barriers, which to some would seem extremely objectionable, and much in the way of elevation in Canada, be contrasted with those in the United States, and we shall distinctly see which of the two countries offer the strongest inducement to the aliened American.

The descendants of the African race have derived from the God of nature unalienable rights, which should be protected against usurpation, theft and robbery, &c. The laws of Canada give to them, at the instant of their arrival, protection against the above infractions; and after compliance with the acts of Parliament affecting them, as taking oaths, &c., they may enjoy the full privileges of British born subjects. The laws of the U. S. denies a colored man's right even to expect, much less to claim, in conjunction with a white man, rights and privileges at the hands of that Government, and makes laws to that effect. These odious and distinctive laws deepen the pit into which they are plunged, renders their case almost hopeless in that country, and exposes their persons, characters, and property, not only to the posse employed by the general government, who stand like so many trained bloodhounds ready to be let loose upon them, but to the constant assaults of the notorious banditti, viz., "sharpers," "killers," black-indians," &c., &c., who like devouring wolves, prowl through the country, and especially around the seaports, to mob any colored man they may chance to meet. Against none of these evils can the descendants of Africa get legal protection in the United States; and yet the practice of chaining, hand-cuffing, and driving negroes, has continued for so many years as now to become the law of the land; to be justified not only by wicked Congressmen, Senators, Judges, Governors, and Presidents, but by Ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as indispensable to the safety and preservation of the "glorious Union." It is very evident that every white man in the United States, from the President down to the scapegallows, claims superiority over the colored man, and a right to do as his ignorance or prejudice may dictate; that he is at the mercy of every white man, from the felonous wretch who has spent the best part of his life in the State's prison, down to the blue-mouthed fugitive from British justice, viz., John Mitchell. They have no protection against daily insults and violence, nor any adequate security for life itself against the hell-black prejudice and lawless passions of negro-hating men, seldom called to account for their treatment of colored people. Preach not to me the doctrine of nativity and of old friends and associates. Tell me not of my father's grave, if to rove the place that gave me birth, to bask in the smiles of old friends and associates, and to linger around the graves of my parents, would incur the forfeit of my manhood, would bind in servile chains my conscience, would fetter my soul, would crush within me every element of a manly nature—I would forego them all to enjoy my unalienable rights. I see but little ground, whatever may be the opinion of others, upon which to build the hope of deliverance in the United States. The scenes, the circumstances, the habits, the educational and moral influences of that country, all conspire to shape the character and disposition of the nation against the African race. Hence, the majority of our friends are reduced to the belief that the prejudice cannot, within the ensuing century, be moved far enough back to allow the colored man the full exercise of his God-given rights in the United States. Still they cry, hold on, boys! hold on! we think times will get better after a while. We are doing our best, however, to make them better. It is known to every intelligent mind that it is impracticable for a man to strive for the removal of what he does not believe can be removed, for it is a fixed law of mind, that we cannot try to do what we do not believe can be done. We may deceitfully go through the motions, but the heart is not in the affected work.

The leading clergymen in the United States assert publicly, and with a degree of indifference well pleasing to their congregations, that it is impossible to remove the prejudice against the African race! That the abolitionists and negroes might as well think to chain up the lightning, or hold down an earthquake! They brand the colored man's hope of rising above it as visionary; they declare that there is not power enough in the religion of Jesus Christ to remove it! Although the men would appear ridiculous, their arguments are not without foundation, which I will clearly show in a few sentences. The truth is, those men are saturated themselves, and they know full well that the great and influential congregations, over which they preside, reek with every possible form of hatred against their unfortunate colored neighbors. They know that any where within the borders of that land, in sight of the seat of government, and in hearing of the boasted flag of liberty, that floats above the Capitol, the sons and daughters of old Africa are bought and sold like horses and cattle, and subjected to every species of violence, malignity, perfidy, rapacity and lust. They know that the chief agencies of society are giving aid to the prejudice against them; the school-room, the pulpit, the press, the forum, the Senate, the ballot-box, all conspire for the most part, to uphold, spread, and perpetuate it. Those men know that the manners in which the children throughout their parishes, and the mass of every community are educated at the present day is calculated rather to strengthen than diminish the prejudice against them; and therefore they say without hesitation, it cannot be done.

Look at the usual training of the young: their common toys are such as cause the infant mind to dread and fear the approach of the colored man. What songs are they first taught to sing? Songs of burlesques on the negro. What books are they encouraged to read? Such as Uncle Tom's Cabin, Good Old Nelly, and others, that exhibit the negro as inferior to the white man. The surest means are taken to fill the young Yankee with hatred. When a company of respectable colored gentlemen and ladies are passing through the streets of any city, (I do not except one) the children who are large enough go forth to grin and gaze at them, and otherwise develop the Yankee character in its primeval state. The mother takes her little babe to the window that it may inhale with its first breath a squirming abhorrence to the negro.

The United States is a great prolific nursery, in which there is more pains taken to cultivate prejudice against the African race than in any other country in the world. Take from the millions, a few hundred abolitionists, and scarce a man will be left who does not worship at the shrine of negrophobia, and set for their children a precedent of their constant devotion. Since, however, the day has dawned, and the sun, has attained its meridian, it is certain that men will not succeed as they have hitherto in hiding the hopeless condition of the aliened American. He nows sees distinctly on every side a multitude of higher influences conspiring to fortify the prejudice against him, that the government furnishes liberal pay to more than a million agents to act as patrols and sentinels, to guard it from assault, that public sentiment, both north and south, canonize and adore it as the guardian angel of the holy union. Seeing those things, he will, doubtless, adopt the "Utopian" scheme Emigration.

R. M. J.

Toronto, March, 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Dear Madam,—As there is going on between emigrationists and anti-emigrationists quite an animated discussion as to the expediency of the colored people of the United States settling in the British Provinces, and as I most decidedly agree with the way it is handled by the former, I am quite willing to leave it in their hands. While I propose to say something with regard to the position which should be occupied by the colored people who settle in British Provinces (politically,) this subject is of vast importance to them. They individually and collectively have at stake the same thing. That is, freedom to themselves and their posterity in America. This by many politicians, both in Canada and the United States (who profess to be great friends to the down-trodden African race) is thought lightly of, especially when brought into competition with other great questions of reform. I remember once in this city, that my vote and interest were solicited by a candidate for parliamentary honors; I wanted to know of him his opinion about annexation (for its advocates here were getting very bold in those days); his reply in substance was as follows: "Oh!," said he, "that question is of little matter;—the great and important question is the Clergy Reserves now." There are many in this Province of his way of thinking. Hence, it may be seen that the freedom of the African race in American is thought by many leading politicians, both in these Provinces and in the States, as of little consequence; but it is with the former that they have to deal, and this brings me to the important question, how they are to be dealt with, and this, by your permission, is what I intend to discuss in my next and succeeding communications, until the whole subject is sifted.

A Descendant of the African Race.

Arrival of the "Pacific."

New York, 14th March, 12 noon.

The Pacific has just arrived, bringing London dates to the 27th February.

The Pacific arrived out Feb. 27th.

The Africa and Sarah Sands had not arrived.

In Parliament Mr. Roebuck's motion, enquiring into the conduct of the war was carried.

Messrs. Gladstone, Herbert, and Graham have resigned.

A battle had taken place between the Turks under Omar Pacha, and a Russian force under Gen. Liprandi,

The Russians were repulsed.

Lord John Russell has been appointed Colonial Secretary.

Lord Raglan is reported to have resigned. Lord Lucan has been re-called.

Commercial:—Cotton quiet. Breadstuffs slightly declined. Consuls unchanged.

Further by the Pacific.

It was officially announced that on the 17th, General Liprandi, with 40,000 Russians and 70 guns, attacked the Turks at Eupatoria, Omar Pacha commanded the Turks. The battle lasted four hours, when the Russians retired with the loss of 500 men.

Affairs before Sebastopol are entirely unchanged.

The Vienna peace conference will be open in a few days.

There was much distress in England owing to the unusually severe winter—general riots had occurred at Liverpool and London in consequence, but the weather having moderated and a large number of ships having arrived giving employment to many of the sufferers, these riots had ceased.

The Pacific brings 51 passengers. She arrived at Liverpool on Friday the 23rd ult. The Africa and Sarah Sands had not arrived out, but the Pacific saw a steamer off Keyston at 1 p.m. 27th, supposed to be the Africa. The Union arrived off Cowes on the 26th.

The news is of an interesting character.

The Palmerston Ministry had fallen to pieces. Graham, Gladstone and Herbert having resigned ostensibly on account of the passage of Mr. Roebuck's motion for a committee to enquire into the management of the war—private squabbles in the Cabinet are however believed to be the cause.

Rumor says the Roebuck party will not rest satisfied without the impeachment of Lord Raglan and one or more ex-ministers.

Palmerston was much troubled in reconstructing the Cabinet, and had not fully completed it.

Lord John Russell takes the Colonial Secretary-ship as a stop gap, but completes his mission to Vienna.

Rumor gives Lord Elgin a seat in the Cabinet as a member of the Board of Control.

The Earl of Carlisle is to be Vice-roy of Ireland.

The new Chancellor of the Exchequer is Mr. Lewis, an untried man.

Members of the Government expressed considerable hopes that pending negotiations will lead to an honorable peace.

War measures continue all over Europe.

Louis Napoleon seems determined to proceed to the Crimea. England and Austria have advised him to stay at home.

Russia has declared war on Sardinia.

It is stated, but not confirmed, that Tuscany has joined the Western Powers, but Naples has not.

General Liprandi with equal or perhaps superior forces attacked Omar Pacha at Eupatoria. The Russians retreated beyond the shells from the enemy's ships; the Turks not pursuing.

There is nothing whatever new from the Danube.

Lord Raglan has resigned, it is said, to avoid a recall.

The Earl of Lucan and some other officers have been invited to resign.

Joseph Hume is dead. He was much respected and is much regretted.

The very inclement weather had ceased, but there was still much suffering among the poor in England.

Sir Charles Wood takes Sir James Graham's place as First Lord of Admiralty.

The proceedings in Parliament have touched upon several points of interest.

On the 19th the Royal Assent was given to the North American Fishery Bill. The Convention between Great Britain and the Porte for the enlistment of the Turkish Contingent, and an interesting debate occurred.

upon going into Committee on the Army Estimates.

Lord Palmerston contended that the sufferings of the army in the Crimea rose from physical cause not in the power of man to control—those sufferings were not confined to the British army, the Russian sick and wounded being 33,000. He further urged that the debate in Parliament had created so much indignation on the continent that the Government had been prevented from putting the foreign enlistment act into operation.

Lord Palmerston announced that Lord Lucan had been recalled in consequence of his difference with Lord Raglan.

On the 20th the Duke of Cambridge took his seat in the House of Lords.

In a general debate upon the conduct of the war the Earl of Harrowby expressed his opinion that a great mistake had been made in not calling the oppressed nationalities of Europe to mind in the present struggle.

Lord Panmure replied that cumpulsory measures must be resorted to, to fill up the ranks of the service.

In the House of Commons a discussion arose in regard to the commerce of Russia, since the commencment of the war ; it was stated in debate that under the present system of blockade the interior trade of Russia had suffered no injury ; £10,000,000 had gone from Great Britain to that country. The right of search was urged as a necessity in order to prevent the introduction of Russian goods into Great Britian, and it was deemed inadvisable to lay before the House the correspondence between Great Britian, and the United States on international arrangements during the time of war, it was stated however that the two countries were on the most friendly terms.

Destitution in England had almost reached its height from the combined causes of an unusually severe winter, unusually dear prices for all descriptions of provisions and a total stagnation of trade. The poor are in a deplorable condition, many thousand labourers had been for weeks without food, excepting the supplies of charity. A riot of two or three days duration occurred in Liverpool and London ; some disturbances occurred among the unemployed in other places. At the sailing of the Pacific, a change for the better had taken place, A sudden thaw had set in and business improved decidedly.

At Eupatoria the Turkish loss was inconsiderable, it is believed that the importance of the battle was generally over-estimated.

The weather had greatly moderated at Sebastopol, and the snow had almost disappeared. The health of the army was improved, and siege operations were progressing with vigor.

Orders had been received at Constantinople, to prepare hospital beds for 50,000 men, from which it was inferred that an assault was to be made on Sebastopol.

The Baltic fleet is to consist of 55 war steamers, carrying 2066 guns, 5 floating batteries with 80 guns, 8 mortar ships, and 28 steam-gun boats carrying 66 guns ; forming a total of 100 ships and 2278 guns.

FRANCE.

Whether the Emperor will go to the Crimea is still a matter of question. It is said he has drawn up a plan of vast military strategy which he wishes to superintend.

England and Austria think he had better leave it with his generals.

The Americans in Paris gave a grand ball in commemoration of Washington's birth-day. All the members of the Diplomatique Corps, as well as the members of the French Government were present.

French papers mention that the City of Catania in Italy had been almost destroyed by an earthquake.

PRUSSIA.

The comp. of the second Chamber of Berlin had resolved to propose a vote of want of confidence in the Ministerial Policy.

The Vienna semi-official journals contradict positively that Austria intends to negotiate a £15,000,000, sterling loan in England

The Imperial Palace of Prague, the residence of the ex-Emperor of Austria has been destroyed by fire.

Arrival of the Africa.

Death of the Emperor of Russia!

HALIFAX, March 15th.

The steamship Africa has arrived at this port. Her advices are four days later than the Pacific's, and her news is of the most startling character. The Emperor of Russia is DEAD. He expired suddenly at one o'clock in the morning of the 2nd instant, and the event created the greatest excitement.

No details of the death of Nicholas of Russia have been received, but there can be no doubt of the fact, as it was announced in the House of Lords on Friday night, by Lord Clarendon, and in the House of Commons by Lord Palmerston.

Rumours are afloat that he was assassinated, but it is thought he died of appoplexy after an attack of influenza. His illness was known in England before the news of his death was received and caused a slight rise in the funds. The effect of his death of course had not transpired when the Africa left Liverpool.

The Vienna conference was to open on the 5th instant, and peace expectations were growing stronger.

From the seat of war there is no news of importance.

Breadstuffs quiet at previous rates.

Provisions dull.

Provincial.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, March 15th—Mr. LARWILL enquired whether lands located by the late Colonel Thomas Talbot, can be purchased? also, whether Government intends to take measures to prevent speculators from monopolizing public lands?

A DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—A destructive fire occurred at St. Catherines on Wednesday night, the 14th inst., in the centre of the town—ten houses were destroyed—the American Hotel and many of the largest stores barely escaping.

We regret to hear that on Saturday last, as the steamer Welland was attempted to enter the Harbour at Port Dalhousie, she was greatly injured by the ice, notwithstanding that all possible care was taken to get her in with safety. She is now at the Queen's Wharf, and we understand she will scarcely be sufficiently repaired to resume her trips in less than a fortnight.—Globe of the 10th.

Fire in the Hospital.

Yesterday morning, about half past six o'clock, one of the nurses in the Toronto General Hospital discovered that a fire had broken out in the roof of the western part of the building. The alarm which, was given in consequence produced the greatest confusion among the sick inmates of the institution, nearly fifty of whom were unable to leave their beds. A young man named John McKenzie having effected an entrance through a small hole into the space between the ceiling and the roof, succeeded in throwing several pails of water against the burning shingles and extinguished the flames. The fire originated from a spark which fell from one of the chimnies and settled between the shingles. Dr. Clarke, the medical superintendent, desired the convalescent patients to hold themselves in readiness to aid him in removing the patients in case the building should be endangered, but happily their services were not called into requisition. The damage done is but trifling.—Globe, March 13.

☞ Miss Stone lectured last evening in the St. Lawrence Hall, on Woman's Rights, to a very large (in spite of the weather,) and a very well pleased (in spite of prejudice) audience. She lectures again to-night on a different branch of the same subject.—Ibid.

On Saturday afternoon, a man named Keens, a shoemaker by trade, living in City Councillor Street, attempted to kill his wife. It appears that both of the parties are much addicted to drinking, and led a very unhappy life. The man came home drunk, on Sunday, and had an altercation with his wife, which ended in his stabbing her with a knife, in the pit of the stomach, inflicting a dreadful wound large enough to insert the hand. The unfortunate woman, in defending herself, was also much cut about the arms. She was removed to the Hospital, and is in a very dangerous condition. Keens, who is represented as a man of superior education, and once intended for the priesthood, escaped, and has not yet been taken.—Montreal Transcript.

EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR.

On Wednesday a young lady, very respectably attired, and who appeared suffering under a great degree of nervous excitement, was brought before the Police Magistrate, her arrest having taken place under the following circumstances:—It appeared that the prisoner, who gave her name as Miss Bolster, and stated that she comes from Port Sarnia, went this morning to the shop of Mr. Ashfield, the gunsmith, and purchased a pistol, requesting the brother of Mr. Ashfield, who served her, to load it. He complied with the request, when she put the pistol in her bosom. On his inquiring what she intended to do with it, she replied that she had come all the way to Toronto, a distance of three hundred miles from her home, for the purpose of procuring the liberation of her younger sister, who had been decoyed into a nunnery for the second time. She had after great efforts procured her freedom on the first occasion, but now, by some unaccountable means, the conductors of the nunnery had again got hold of her, and she herself had become nearly distracted at the thought of their detaining the young girl, who is only 15 years of age, and she did not know what evil might happen to her in such a place. She said she had determined to go to the nunnery, insist on the immediate liberation of her sistor, and if the lady in charge of that establishment persisted in detaining her, she had come to the resolution of shooting her. On learning her intention, and being impressed with the belief that his customer would not shrink from carrying out her designs, Mr. Ashfield had conceived it to be his duty to call the attention of the Police Magistrate to the circumstance, leaving him to take any further action in the matter he might think best. On the appearance of the defendant in Court, and after hearing the same determination expressed from her own lips, the magistrate said that however strongly he might personally feel for her situation, he had no alternative, in the exercise of his duty, but to retain her till she could find bail to keep the peace. Her brother went bail for her as soon as he was notified of her position. Miss Bolster is a young lady of superior appearance and address, and said to be very respectably connected.—Leader.

Secret Annexation Society.

We cut from a Buffalo paper the following, which escaped our notice in the New York Herald :—

A SECRET SOCIETY IN CANADA.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Herald, residing in Sutton, Canada East, tells a curious and improbable story about the existence of a secret organization in Canada, having for its object the release of that province from allegiance to the crown and the formation of an independent republic. He says that the society in its general arrangements and method of imitation somewhat resembles the society of Know-Nothings; but the oath of secrecy is stronger and more binding. Lodges have been established throughout the eastern townships and a large section of the upper province, and the writer states that "in the single county of Missisquoi, bordering on Vermont, they have a subordinate lodge in nearly every town, and in this county alone there are several thousand Know-Nothings or Republicans. No move, probably, will be made by the republicans until the spring opens, further than to secretly increase their numbers and supply themselves with the necessary implements of war."

We should like to know what Mr. George Brown, and his organ the Globe, can say now, in defence of their support and encouragement of the Annexation leaders; the fruits of which are thus developing themselves? We should not wish to be in the Editor's shoes, when the indignation of his readers begin to be fairly aroused!—Colonist.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

Office on Colborne Street, Corner of the Old Post Office Lane.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16*TH VIC. CAP.* 85 DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now in active operation to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of the Union, and in our private capacity as citizens, 1st To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,

OR,

The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,

A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress," &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.

BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Poetry.

The Cradle Song of the Poor.

Hush! I cannot bear to see thee
Stretch thy tiny hands in vain;
I have got no bread to give thee,
Nothing, child, to ease thy pain.
When God sent thee first to bless me,
Proud, and thankful too, was I;
Now, my darling, I, thy mother,
Almost long to see thee die.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

I have watched thy beauty fading,
And thy strength sink day by day;
Soon, I know, will Want and Fever
Take thy little life away.
Famine makes thy father reckless,
Hope has left both him and me;
We could suffer all, my baby,
Had we but a crust for thee.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

Better thou shouldst perish early,
Starve so soon, my darling one,
Than live to want, to sin, to struggle
Vainly still, as I have done.
Better that thy angel spirit
With my joy my peace were flown,
Ere thy heart grow cold and careless,
Reckless, hopeless, like my own.
Sleep my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

I am wasted, dear, with hunger,
And my brain is all opprest,
I have scarcely strength to press thee,
Wan and feeble, to my breast.
Patience, baby, God will help us,
Death will come to thee and me,
He will take us to his Heaven.
Where no want or pain can be.
Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.

Such the plaint, that late and early,
Did we listen, we might hear,
Close beside us,—but the thunder
Of a city dulls our ear.
Every heart, like God's bright Angel,
Can bid one such sorrow cease;
God has glory when His children
Bring His poor ones joy and peace!
Listen, nearer while she sings
Sounds the fluttering of wings!

The Rattlesnake and its Congeners.

Of all animated life, the serpent at first sight, is the most repulsive; and yet, with the species, there is such a combination of the beautiful, the terrible, and the mysterious, that the beholder, in spite of himself, is attracted by their appearance. The association of the animal with the fall of our first parents, no doubt, to the Christian mind, gives it a vague and undefined interest; but with all heathen nations, and from the remotest times, the serpent has occupied the most prominent place, not only as a deity, but as the fittest physical representative of spiritual qualities. Upon the earliest monuments of Egypt, Syria, Greece, India, China, and even on those of the conventionally newer nations of America—in fact, every where on the globe—it has ever been made typical of wisdom—power—duration—the good and evil principles, and of eternity. "It has entered into the mythology of every nation, consecrated almost every temple, symbolized almost every deity, was imagined in the heavens, stamped upon the earth, and ruled in the realms of everlasting sorrow." Moses lifted up a brazen serpent in the wilderness, and those afflicted who looked upon it lived, and thus it was made to shadow forth the mightiest event wrought for the redemption of mankind; yet why it has been thus universally used, seems impossible of solution. The ancients attempted various explanations, but all founded upon fabled qualities, for they evidently knew little of the natural history of the animal, and instead of describing the living, breathing thing, merely repeated and exagerated those strange attributes ascribed to their deified representations.

The most striking hierograms in which the serpent occurs are those of Egypt, and usually appear over the entrances of their great temples; these are composed of a pair of extended wings, a globe, and two serpents: the globe signified the simple essence, the wings the penetration of universal power, the serpents the life-giving principle. This expressive compound emblem has been found by Mr. Layard among the supposed ruins of Nineveh; it also occurs on Syrian and Persian temples. Aztec ruins in Mexico are still to be seen, composed of large stones, in which some particular layer is projected from the plain wall, and ingeniously sculptured so as to represent a huge snake encircling the edifice. Stone works of vast extent, in the forms of serpents, penetrated or surrounded the Druidical temples of the early Britons. Our own fertile valleys of the West are filled with tumular monuments, a mile in length, erected by the early inhabitants of this continent, representing pythons in every form, and displaying a perfect sympathy of intention with similar creations in the Eastern world.

Of the connection of the serpent with the temptation of Eve, we have heard a strange story related by an American traveler in Egypt, who was noted among his companions for his willingness to intrude upon out-of-the-way and admitted-to-be dangerous places. An Arab guide, perceiving this peculiarity, offered, for a consideration, to conduct him into the interior of one of the large pyramids, and show him a room, upon the walls of which was a picture no Frank had ever seen. The bargain was at once consummated, and the parties entered the structure, and after sliding down an inclined plane of some hundred feet, they came upon a large room, out of which led a narrow and half choked-up communication with an adjoining apartment. This apartment reached, the Arab lit his torches, and exposed to the astonished gaze of the traveler a painting, fresh as if the work of yesterday, representing a serpent with human arms and legs, handing an apple to an Egyptian woman; both figures relieved by the conventional trees peculiar to such early art. If this story be true—and we have no reason to doubt its authenticity—we have a pictorial representation of the Fall of Man, possibly more ancient than even the Mosaic account.

A large portion of the rings, necklaces, and bracelets found in ancient tombs are formed of single or combined serpents, beautifully varigated by different colors in gold, precious stones, and enamels; and the commonest form of household Gods of the Mexicans and Peruvians was the same, and probably it was a favourite example of their finer jewelry. This emblem is also dug out of our western mounds, sculptured in fine basalt, and betraying a vast amount of labor and excellent art. As the light of Christian civilization dawned upon mankind, the mythological character of this form of life seems to have become more disregarded, until now it is only alluded to in such a connection as is indicative of the deplorable ignorance of early times—yet there is a taint left in our natures for the old superstition; for we still maintain, with the ancients, a predilection for ornaments of the serpent form; and we daily meet in the rich saloons of Europe, and of our own country, fingers as delicate as Pharaoh's daughter's glistering with snaky rings, and arms more beautiful than Cleopatra's that are encircled by the golded asp

Our object is not, however, to deal with the vague and often sublime fancies of the ancients regarding the serpent, but to treat of its history in the spirit of the age—when speculation gives way to truth, and the fables of times past are forgotten in the interesting facts brought forth by the naturalist and other close observer of the Creator's works. A general division of serpents may be made in the distinction which lies between those which kill by muscular pressure and those which destroy their prey by poison. The latter class are comparatively few in number, and may be considered exceptions to the general rule; for all boas, pythons, and most snakes, depend for their subsistence upon the power they possess of crushing their prey in enveloping folds. The assertion that most serpents in temperate climates are harmless, can not readily be assented to; for the Englishman, who has not a really dangerous specimen on his native island, shrinks from their presence with all the fear that he betrays when he meets with the really death-dealing cobras of the jungles of India; and it is remarkable, that Europeans residing in that country, soon become indifferent to the vicinity of the most destructive wild beasts of prey, but can never conquer their dread of snakes The same thing may be said of the enlightened mind every where, for it recoils from the presence of serpent life.

This terror is one of the most defined instincts of human nature, for it exists without having been founded upon any direful experience, and can not be overcome by reason; yet most serpents are beautiful, and in their adornment, combine with unequaled grace all the brilliant colors of the most precious mosaics. We knew an excellent artist who had a taste for natural history, and being favorably situated for gratifying a long indulged wish, he determined to place upon canvas the gorgeous beauties of the rattlesnake. It so happened that while he was busied with the last touches upon a portrait of a lovely girl—was adding the rich carnations to the lips, the azure to her eyes, and the sunny auburn to a profusion of glowing locks, he received the announcement that a just killed rattlesnake was at his disposal. A few moments only elapsed before his sitters were changed. In place of all that was beautiful—in place of intelligence—in place of woman in her loveliest estate, there was reared the form, according to our instinctive ideas, of the most repulsive of created things. By a happy conception the serpent was arranged in a most natural attitude of defence; its mouth was open, its fangs displayed, and the enthusiastic painter began his work. Soon by the aid of chalk the spiral and expressive form was produced upon the canvas; next was seized the pallet, the colors all beaming in flesh tints, the pencils still glowing with the imitating hues of Hebe; but all in their purity found a place upon the serpent's form. The delicate pink, the softened carmine, the Tyrian blue, the deep auburn, were not only necessary, but just as they appeared in their clearness and purity, so did they most approach the original, and aid in starting forth a picture of horrid fascination. With the hand of genius the labor of an hour made the task complete—the effect was magically produced—a vivid glowing lesson had been taught, that the thing we love and worship in nature, or shrink from with terror, are but combinations of the same charming effects of form and color; and that in our own minds, and out and out in the outward things, is the beauty of hideousness that attracts or repels.

Serpents, says a distinguished naturalist, have been improperly regarded as animals degraded from a higher type; but their whole organization, and especially their bony structure, demonstrate that their parts are as exquisitely adjusted to their habits and sphere of life, as is the organization of any animal conventionally superior to them. Nothing can be more wonderful than to see the work of feet and fins performed by a modification of the vertebral column. As serpents move chiefly on the surface of the earth, their danger is greatest from pressure and blows from above; all the joints are fashioned, therefore, to resist yielding, and sustain pressure in a vertical direction; there is no natural undulation of the body upward and downward—it is only permitted from side to side. The serpent, simple as it is in form, can, by the wonderful wisdom displayed in its creation, outswim the fish, outleap the jerboa, and suddenly loosing the close coils of its couching spiral, it can spring into the air and seize the bird upon the wing; for all these creatures have been known to fall its prey. The serpent, without arms or talons, can outwrestle the athlete, and crush the tiger in the embrace of its ponderous overlapping folds; and instead of being obliged to lick up its food as it glides along, it uplifts its crushed prey to its mouth, grasped in the death-coil as in a hand.

There are properly no sea snakes, although we hear much of sea serpents. Most snakes swim well in water, but they must have their head out to breathe, else they will drown about as soon as the lower orders of most land animals. Eels are not snakes, and most people are conscious of the fact; yet few can tell the distinguishing traits of difference between them and the reptile ashore: the eel has a flat tail, erect as an oar, the snake has a round one. Yet the sea, it would seem, is not altogether free from serpentine life that will vie for poison with the rattlesnake itself. In Haydon's extraordinary autobiography, there is a singular incident related, illustrative of our position. Her Majesty's brig Algerine was at anchor in Madras Roads, when one of the marines hooked and brought on board what was evidently taken for an eel. A young officer of the brig, Haydon's step-son, took the animal in his hand, which irritated it, and it seized hold of the young man's fore-finger, and held the skin doubled up between its teeth until forced to let go its hold. This occurred at half past seven in the morning. The bitten man held the occurrence lightly, and went down to breakfast, but soon after felt some uneasiness in his throat, which quickly began to swell, and the patient, although attended by two physicians, died in just three hours after receiving the wound. Soon after death the neck was discolored, the body spotted, and it was found necessary to hasten the burial. The snake (so called,) was six feet six inches in length, general color yellow, ornamented with forty-three black rings equidistant, its circumference eighteen inches in the largest part, its tail projecting vertically, flat or compressed, which shows that it was a native of the sea. It had three rows of teeth, but no fangs could be discovered.

We are accustomed to say that the serpent swallows its food; this is true in a general sense, but not so, if we understand the act as applied to animals of a higher organization. A boa attempting to bury a buffalo in its capacious maw, or a little garter snake disposed to do the same favor for a juvenile frog, does not let the precious but very different sized morsels tremble for a moment on their palates, and then disappear; on the contrary, after the meal is prepared, the bulk may be many times larger in diameter than the apparent size of the jaws and throat that are to receive them. But no difficulty is in the way; the jaws of the serpent not only seperate, if necessary, from eace other—being held together only by cartilaginous ligament—but they also have the power of protruding or retracting them, one independently of the other. By this arrangement, one side of the jaws is extended forward, and the two rows of teeth of the upper, and the single row of the lower fixed into the prey; then the opposite side of the jaws is pushed on in the same manner, and so on alternately, until the mass disappears.

I took a good deal of trouble (says a recent traveler in Ceylon) to inquire the size of the boa-python of that country; but though I heard of several that, within the memory or tradition of men had been killed, measuring thirty feet, I never heard that size exceeded; but this by no means proves that their growth is limited to that length, or that they may not exist in large numbers. Game of all kinds is so plentiful in Ceylon that the boa need never be forced into the neighborhood of men to procure food. In India I know, from eye-witnesses, of their being killed forty-five feet long, and six feet in circumference; and the one killed in the Sunderbund some years ago, was credibly reported to be sixty feet; moreover, in proof that this need not be an exaggeration, we may remember, that the snake that stopped the army of Atilius Regulus in the river Bagroda, was one hundred and twenty feet in length, and that its skeleton was preserved in Rome, until within some three or four centuries.

Boas, however, of most promising proportions, occasionally visit the scenes of civilization. A perfectly authenticated story is told of an officer residing in British Guiana, who amused himself in fishing and hunting in a neighboring river. One sultry day tired with unsuccessful sport, he threw his lines, and drew his canoe to the river's edge, for the purpose of refreshing himself in the water. Having done so, he strtched himself half dressed, on the benches of his canoe, with his gun at his head loaded with shot, and in this position he fell asleep. Presently he was roused from his slumber by a curious sensation, as if some animal were licking his foot. In a state of half stupor, natural to waking from a sound sleep, he cast his eyes downward, and, to his horror, perceived the neck and head of a monstrous serpent, covering his foot with saliva, preparatory to commencing the process of swallowing him whole. The officer had faced death in many forms—on the ocean in the battle-field, but never had he conceived of it in such terrible guise. For a moment, and but a moment, the officer was fascinated, and then withdrawing his foot, he instinctively seized his gun lying beside him.

The reptile, apparently disturbed, for it had evidently mistaken the officer for a dead carcass, drew its head below the canoe. It rose again, moving backward and forward, as if in search of the object it had lost. The officer, with the muzzle of his gun within a yard or two of the serpent, fired, lodging the contents in its head. The terrible boa, with a hiss, raised its heretofore unseen body in the air, and seemed determined to throw itself upon the officer and embrace him in its powerful coils. A fortunate stroke of the paddle sent the canoe into the stream and to a place of safety. Having procured assistance, the officer returned to the place of attack; and having killed the reptile found it upward of forty feet in length and of proportionate thickness.

Another officer in the British service, stationed with his regiment in the neighborhood of Kalladgee, in India—a region in which monkeys abound in numberless quantities—professes to have been a witness to the following extraordinary scene:

He was one day, accompanied by a native as a companion, climbing one of the slanting ascents of a neighboring cliff, when he became aware that an unusual commotion existed among the monkeys, which had become so familiar with the officers appearance, that they seldom honored him with a snarl or any other expression of dislike. Creeping round the projection of a rock, behind which the monkeys seemed to have congregated, the officer became a witness of a strange tragedy in simean life. In the volumnious folds of an enormous boa was being slowly enwrapped a beautiful brown monkey, whose last cries and struggles denoted that all succor was too late. The surrounding monkeys, in wild alarm, were running hither and thither, moping, moaning, and chattering, but not one advanced near the spot where their poor companion was momentarily disappearing in the dread folds of its destroyer. The officer, whose curiosity was highly excited, sat down, and determined to watch the serpent prepare its food for deglutition. The bones of the poor victim were broken like pipe stems by the pressure to which they were subjected; and gradually the reptile began to untwist its fold, affording a magnificent view of its glittering scales, which shone like variagated metallic substances. The officer shuddered as he beheld the serpent's head—its prominent eyes luminous with fiery light. Perfectly heedless of the noise made by the monkeys, it unwound its coils till the victim, now an unrecognizable mass, lay before it lubricated and fit to be received into the destroyer's stomach. When the reptile had fairly commenced its repast, and before the flacid body began to fill and swell, the officer, with the assistance of his companion, the native, determined upon capturing the soon to be sated giant. Accompainied by the stout lascar, bearing a strong cudgel and sharp knife, the officer felt there would be little difficulty in securing the prize when once filled to repletion. But upon nearing the scene of strife a new subject of admiration presented itself. The constrictor lay thoroughly gorged, beneath a projecting mass of the cliff, and resembled more a log of wood than a thing of life. On the summit of this projecting rock a troop of monkeys had assembled, and three or four of the largest and strongest were occupied in displacing an immense fragment of the massive stone, already loosened by time and the elements from the parent ledge. By enormous exertions—made in a silence that was rare with the volatile creatures—they at last succeeded in pushing the rock until it trembled just over the boa's head; when uttering a fierce yell, in which every separate voice mingled in exultation, by a vigorous movement they shoved it over the precipice. The heavy mass had been judiciously poised, for it struck the serpent on the head, mashing it to a jelly, and as the reptile threw its fearful tail about in its last struggles, the officer and native instinctively joined in the cries of exultation of the monkeys, as they rejoiced over their well-accomplished vengeance.

A Singed Cat.

The New York and Erie Railroad Office, in this city, was on Thursday the scene of an incident which is worthy of being recorded with the events of the day—not only because it was a good joke, but because it bears on its face a moral.

An old man enters the office—in age apparently verging on three score; his clothes are of coarse texture, ventilated in some places, and rather dingy withal; his head, with its long, gray locks, is covered with a hard-worn beaver; his face, the lower part of which is ornamented with a grizzly-gray beard, has an humble appearance, and his dull eyes have an imploring expression; he has a folded paper in his hand, and, advancing to the desk of the first clerk, he extends it.

Clerk—Go away, sir; I haven't anything for you.

Old Man—(Brightening up with a look of surprise)—But, sir—

Clerk—No buts about it, sir; I tell you I have nothing for you. Go out.

The old man with a mingled look of surprise and indignation, passes on to the desk of another Clerk, and offers the paper.

Clerk—Don't interrupt me, sir; get out of the office; I give nothing to beggars.

The truth begins to reveal itself to the old man's understanding; that last word has rekindled the fires of his youth; his face glows, and his eyes flash with indignation; he is about to retort sharply upon the man who called him a "beggar," when a third party interferes, and directs him to the Cashier, to whom the old man hands the papers. The Cashier unfolds them, and finds, instead of begging certificates, New York and Erie Income Bonds to the amount of ten thousand dollars! Cashier looks surprised—the old man demands his money—Clerk No. 1 takes a seat on the cross-bar of his desk, out of sight—Clerk No. 2 turns red, purple and white by turns; the old man receives his money and makes a noisy exit, mumbling something about counter-jumpers and broadcloth.—New York Tribune.

European Beauty at a Discount in Africa.

We had to wait a considerable time in the outer court and doorway before his majesty was pleased to admit us. A crowd of soldiers collected round us, and amused themselves with facetious remarks on our appearance, such as "Cat's eyes," "Monkey's hair," "What nice red morocco their skin would make for a sword-sheath!" &c. These expressions were afterwards made known to me; for in those days I was in a state of ignorance as regarded the language; and having a tolerably good opinion of my appearance, I judged that their remarks must be highly complimentary. I remember some years after this asking a person with whom I had become intimate, and who had never seen any white man but myself, what impression my first appearance had made on him. He answered me very simply that I resembled a rather good-looking Abyssinian who had lost his skin. But I must own that our appearance at the time of our first visit to Howzayn was calculated to excite much amusement. We had only recently adopted the Abyssinian costume, and as yet were not altogether well practised in the mode of putting on the cloth. Besides which, our straight hair, not yet long enough to be tressed, was plastered back with butter, and the faces of those of our party who were encased in a thin skin, which I am happy to say never was my fate, were as red as a fresh capsicum.—From Parkyn's "Life in Abyssinia."

Extent of British Possessions in India.

Our territory is equal to all the continents of Europe, Russia excepted. Peshwur is as far north of Ponjore as Stockholm is of Naples; Chirtagong, as far east of Kurrachee, as Athens is of Paris. Germany, Italy, France, Spain, Holland, Belgium, Denmark and Sweden, unitedly do not equal either our territory or our population. The grand trigonometrical survey, which has lately been printed for parliament, gives the total—area in square miles, 1,368,11; population, 131,145,903. And a connected copy with which we have been favored, adds seven millions and a half to this population, most of which is our own territories, but part in the native states, making the total, 158,774,065. But the fact is, that even from our territories many of the returns are no better than guesses and from the native states, few are to be relied upon. It has, however, generally proved that accurate returns gives a higher population than previous estimates; and after considerable attention to the subject for years, we should not be surprised to find the official statement gradually coming up from its present advanced figure, to nearly two hundred millions. This splendid empire is distributed into four governments or presidencies; Bengal, Madrid, Bombay and Agra. The first is the seat of the governor general and the supreme council, the next two have each a governor and council; and Agra is administered by a lieutenant governor, without a council. The army is—queen's troops, 25,480; company's European troops, 19,928; company's native troops, 240,111; total, 289,529; native contingents, commanded by British officers and available under treaties 32,090, total at the disposal of the governor general, 333,529. This is a great army, yet its proportion to the extent of the empire presents a forcible comment on the names of the British rule. Compare it with the proportion which the armies of the continent bear to the population of the respective countries and you might imagine that they were holding conquered nations, and were governing our hereditary soil. Forty-nine thousand out of the whole are Englishmen! a less number than is generally found necessarily to garrision the one city of Paris! Even the native Rajahs, with a population of 55,000,000, have 400,000 soldiers; while we, with double the population, have 110,000 less though they are guaranteed against eternal war, and we have to take all risks. Then our 240,000 native troops are a strength or a weakness, just as our authority is popular or the reverse. Were their attachment lost, how formidable would they be, taught in our mode of war, and five times as numerous as the English soldiers! Were they and the troops of the Rajahs united against us, it would be 50,000 against 640,000! You may travel through India without coming on a military station. You may pass through kingdoms, with three million or more inhabitants, containing only one post of European troops; you may find great cities without a soldier; the remains of a vast fortification, near which not a uniform is visible. Facts such as these, when contrasted with the countries of even civilised Europe, forcibly prove that the power of the English has foundations in the homes of the people, as well as in the cantonments of the soldiers. In the native regiments, the officers are as to numbers, about half native, half English; but no native officer can rise higher than a kind of captaincy, or majority, and even that is under the youngest European ensign a position much worse than that enjoyed by Hindus in the armies of the Mussalman.

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.—A black man once went to Porland, and attended church. He went into a good pew, and the next neighbor asked the man who owned it why he put a nigger into his pew?

"Why, sir, he's a Haytien."

"Can't help that—he's black."

"Why, sir, he's a correspondent of mine."

"Can't help that—he's black."

"He's worth a million of dollars."

"Introduce me."

Poultry.

In these days, when all the world is running after Cochin China and Shanghai, Bantams, Dorkings, Dutch, Spanish, and Poland fowls, the omission of a chapter on the poultry-yard would, I fear, be regarded as a grave neglect in a work that is chiefly devoted to instruction on points of rural economy. Of the management of the rarer breeds of poultry, I have had no experience myself at present, but I have been assured by those who have been most successful in their rearing of Shanghai and Cochin Chica fowls, that they have had no trouble more with them than with the common barn-door fowls. The want of having good fowls, and plenty of eggs, seems simply to consist in attention to their being well supplied with good food, clean water, ashes, lime, rubbish and charcoal; a clean, airy pen, in summer, and a warm, sheltered roost in winter. A supply of animal food seems greatly to promote vigor in fowls. Where fewer dogs are kept, the fowls come in for much valuable food, which tells well upon the richness and increase of their flesh and eggs. Those persons who succeed best with poultry, are careful to cater well for them, and will boil up all sorts of refuse vegetables, especially potatoes, carrots, parsnips, and other roots to mix with their grain. Boiled Indian corn, or crushed corn steeped, makes very satisfying food for fowls.

In this country, fowls in general, are left very much to take care of themselves. They have the run of the barn-yard, and are even allowed by some of the improvident, small growers, who are seldom the most economical managers, to have the run of the barn itself. That such a plan is a very wasteful one it hardly needs any one to declare. Not only is there a vast and unnecessary expenditure of valuable grain, but, a considerable deal that is injured and made unsaleable. By a little care of the dross and refuse corn, the fowls would be equally well fed without that woful waste which the want of a proper system of management produces. I have known this plan pursued even among farmers who were careful in other matters, but whose wives were so short-sighted, as to persuade them into the belief that, because they were able to sell a few dozen of eggs at ten pence or a shilling a dozen, in the early part of the season, that this was all clear gain—quite forgetful of the loss and injury to the corn.

Fowls fed with scalded bran, or the coarse part of the flour, generally known here as sharps or canaille, mixed with potatoes or other vegetables, any scraps of meat and refuse grain, and curdled milk scalded so as harden the curd, with access to ashes and gravelly substances, will ensure plenty of eggs without giving them access to the barn or granary.

Besides the eggs consumed in the family, since the laying season, my children have sent to market upwards of one hundred dozen eggs, which have been sold at prices varying from one shilling to seven pence half-penny per dozen. The fowls have received little grain, and not much attention—in number they were about thirty-five. They were shut out from the barn, and had no access to the seeds in the fields. With more attention we might have had a still larger return, but this is sufficient to prove that fowls are well worthy of the attention of the Canadian housewife.

During the grain-growing season, and if there be any wheat fields near the farm-yard, it will be advisable to confine the fowls within an enclosure—a green yard, with a high picket fence round is the best sort of fowl-yard. A coarse thread, of common Dutch twine, tied from post to post, will effectually prevent any fowl from attempting to fly over the fence. A shelter at one end of this enclosure for roost and laying place; plenty of dust and ashes in a heap for them to roll in, with a trough for water, will be all-sufficient; a tree makes a good summer roost, and a few bushes for shelter from the great heat of the sun is also advisable for the comfort of this fowl-yard. The confinement need not last long at either season, and it is well worth the trouble of having such a convenience made to prevent loss and vexation of spirit. When once made it lasts for years, and would soon repay the farmer for the outlay of a few days labor, and a few nails for fastening up the pickets.

The young chickens are seldom cooped for more than a few days, if the weather be fine and warm; they will thrive as well abroad, or in the enclosed yard.

For the rearing of geese and ducks with profit, they should have access to a creek or pond of water, mill-dam or lake. On the rice beds geese fattens finely, and do well; but as the goslings are hatched in the spring, a season which is usually very changeable, more care is required for keeping the tender gosling from the cold and wet, than is usually bestowed upon the chickens, which come later and are more hardy. The goose is usually cooped in a large coop, and this is surrounded with a fence, enclosing several square yards of green turf. A flat pan with some stones in it is given for the goslings to wash in: the stones enable them to stand and keep themselves dry while drinking, as too much wet is bad for them during the first week or ten days. Scalded bran, curds, and crums, or soaked and crushed Indian corn may be given them, which, with the grass in the yard, will be all-sufficient. At a fortnight's end, if the weather be dry, they may be let out.

Geese are often found great depredators in the young wheat fields. The old gander and brood geese are treated with a yoke or neck-ring: this is simply an oblong piece of shingle, shaped into an oval form, with a hole in the centre. This is drawn over the head of the goose, and effectually keeps it from breaking into the fields through the rail fences;—a goose is never at the trouble of climbing, so the remedy is effectual.

I have known geese sold as low as one shilling and three pence a-piece; but they are now double that price.

To make geese profitable, the farmer's wife plucks them twice and sometimes thrice in a season; but the quills are not touched, so that the animal suffers but little from the operation. The head of the goose or gander is put into a bag; (an old sock is sometimes used;) this is tied about the neck—the darkness keeps the creature quiet—and the feathers are plucked into a basket: a still day and a warm one is chosen; and in the moulting season the feathers fall easily, and perhaps the loss of them may be a relief from the heat of such a thick covering.

Turnips chopped small; raw and boiled potatoes, with the run of the barn-yard, is the goose's fare in the winter. A low log-shed, with a door to shut them in at night, is necessary. They also, as all fowls do, require lime and ashes in their house in winter. The goose begins to lay in March or April; but if the season be at all mild, in the latter part of March. The egg should be brought in as soon as laid, as the frost chills it very quickly; placed in a box of bran or saw-dust, till the goose is ready to sit, and the goose must be given water, or let out to wash and feed once a day—she sits thirty days. It is better to remove the early-hatched goslings, when strong enough, to a bas'tet, but I would not feed them; return them at night to the mother, and you will most likely have the rest of the family by the following noon. Late-hatched goslings are often allowed to go abroad under the care of the old ones without any shelter, and in some dry seasons they will succeed as well as those who have had a great fuss made about them; but in cold wet springs care and shelter are requisite to ensure the lives of the little family. If the cock be remarkable for his tender care of his wives, the gander is no less admirable as a father in protecting and cherishing his young ones. There is much that is interesting and admirable to be learned in the poultry-yard by the careful observer; and many a pleasant, cheerful hour may be passed in the care of the domestic birds about the farmer's yard: children learn lessons of care and kindness, and many a moral lesson the wise mother may inculcate, even from so homely a creature as the common hen.

In suitable localities the duck is easily managed; but they need a constant supply of water, and will not thrive unless they have free access to a stream or pond. The little ducklings require to be cooped with the mother, and fed with curds, bran, or some soft food for a few weeks. They are very useful in freeing a garden from insects; and thrive well in dry weather, while very young. Near lakes and mill ponds they get their own living on the weeds and shell-fish; but where no water is, they require a great deal of feeding.

The turkey breeds well in Canada; but the young ones are great ramblers, and do much hurt to the young grain; and for this reason the farmer is shy of breeding them. Some manage to confine them by tethering the hen to a stake, when the young will not ramble far from her.

The Guinea fowl are hardy enough to be kept; and even the tender pea-fowl prosper and breed well in Canada; roosting within the barn in the winter; and it is not often they die from cold if well fed. I know many farmer's wives w o rear the young to sell, which they do at various prices, from seven shillings and six pence to three dollars a head.

Of late years poultry have been more attended to as a matter of profit, as well as of amusement, and no doubt will well repay the care bestowed upon them.

INDIAN MUFFINS.—A pint and a-half of yellow Indian meal, sifted. A handful of wheat flour. A quarter of a pound of fresh butter. A quart of milk. Four eggs. A very small teaspoonful of salt. Put the milk into a saucepan. Cut the butter into it. Set it over the fire and warm it until the butter is very soft, but not until it melts. Then take it off, stir it well till all is mixed, and set away to cool. Beat four eggs very light; and when the milk is cold, stir them into it, alternately with the meal, a little at a time of each. Add the salt. Beat the whole very hard after it is all mixed. Then butter some muffin-rings on the inside. Set them in a hot oven, or on a heated griddle; pour some of the batter into each; and bake the muffins well. Send them hot to table, continuing to bake while a fresh supply is wanted. Pull them open with your fingers, and eat them with butter, to which you may add molasses or honey.—Farm Journal.

THE WAR.

Defeat of the Russians at Eupatoria, by Omer Pasha.

BUCHAREST, Friday,—A messenger who left Eupatoria on the 17th Feb., and performed the journey from Farna to Bucharest in twenty-six hours, brings the following despatch from the Daily News correspondent:—

"EUPATORIA, Feb. 17.—The Russians attacked Eupatoria this morning. They were commanded by Liprandi; and their numbers were, 20,000 infantry and 6,000 cavalry. They commenced the attack an hour before daybreak, and had with them seventy guns. The conflict lasted three hours. The assault was signally repulsed. The steamers threw shell among the assailants. The Russians have 500 men hors de combat, the Turks 150. Omer Pasha commanded in person. Selim Pasha, the Egyptian was killed. Vast masses of cavalry and artilery are now assembled round Eupatoria."

The following telegraphic despatch has been received from Lord Raglan, through the British agent at Bucharest:—"Before Sebastopol, February 13th, 1855.—A force, said to be 40,000, of Russians, with a large number of guns, attacked Eupatoria at daylight on the 17th, and was repulsed with loss by Omer Pasha. Turkish loss said to be inconsiderable; but Selim Pasha, commanding Egyptian brigade, was killed. The British men-of-war, under the Hon. Captai[illegible]ed both flanks with great effect. The action terminated at ten a.m., when the Russians retired a few miles."

Despatch from Lord Raglan.

War Department, Feb. 23, 1855.

Lord Panmure has this day received a despatch and its enclosures, of which the following are copies, addressed to His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, by Field-Marshal the Lord Raglan, G.C.B.

"Before Sebastopol, Feb. 10, 1855.

"My Lord Duke,—I have nothing material or important to report to your Grace since I addressed you on the 6th.

"There was rain yesterday and the day before, and in the course of last night there was a considerable fall of snow, which remains on the ground; but it does not freeze, and the country is again saturated with wet.

"Large convoys of apparently sick men were observed to be moving out of the place, and numerous carts, with one horse, to be coming in.

"The enemy appear to be breaking up hulks in the Arsenal Creek, and to be using the material for platforms and cheveaux de frise at the battery "du Mat."

"We are proceeding with the armament of the works on the right.

"The health of the troops continues to improve in some slight degree. They are amply supplied with warm clothing, and with provisions.

"Forage is our only want, and this arises chiefly from the Commissary-General not receiving from England the supplies of hay upon which he has relied.

"I enclose the return of casualties to the 8th instant.

"I have, &c.,

"RAGLAN.

"His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, &c., &c., &c."

The casualties from Feb. 5 to Feb. 8, inclusive, are 4 rank and file wounded.

Telegraphic Despatches.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 15.—The enrolment of Turks in a British auxiliary corps has commenced by authority of Lord Redcliffe. A number of steam-ships have been appointed to cruise in the Sea of Azoff. The French troops that were at Constantinople have been ordered to the Crimea. The two-mortar battery destined to play on the fort of Sebastopol will be ready before the end of this month.

PARIS, Sunday.—The Constitutionnel announces that 5,600 infantry and 800 cavalry will leave probably at the beginning of March. The utmost enthusiasm reigns in the corps.

The affair of the mine, mentioned in a Russian despatch, is explained by advices from Constantinople of the 15th. A Russian counter mine was driven into a French mine on the night of the 4th. Only two French were killed.

The Journal de St. Petersburg contains a circular despatch, dated Feb. 17, severely condemning the conduct of Sardinia in joining the Allies; inasmuch as Russia had done nothing to provoke war. Sardinian subjects and Sardinian ships are at liberty to leave Russia, and their property, it is promised, shall be respected. The exequatures or Sardinian consul are withdrawn; and the agent of Russia at Genoa and Nice are ordered to discontinue their relations with the Government.

Advices from the Crimea, dated the 14th inst., brought to Malta by the Arabia in sixty-three hours from Constantinople, announces that some thousand Russians who accompanied the Grand Duke Michael to Sebastopol had been frozen to death.

Letters from Balaklava state that in the night of the 7th the Russians, who had returned to the number of about 20,000, and taken up permanent quarters to the east of the plain of Balaklava, threw up a breastwork a little in advance and to the north of Kamara. Upon a nearer examination, one end of the breastwork was found to be already defended with two long and heavy guns, bearing upon the right of our position. Their object appears to be to form an entrenched camp in our rear, and to defend it by formidable artillery. They might thus issue forth at any time, harass our men by constant alertes, or convert a successful demonstration into a vigorous attack, should an error on the part of our generals give them the opportunity. It is said that a movement would probably be made to drive them from this position.

Prince Menschikoff, writing on the 12th, says:—"On the 2nd, Adjutant Ufleth partly destroyed a French subterranean gallery. On the 6th the French made an ineffectual attempt to destroy our countermines. On the 8th we exploded another mine and destroyed the enemy's works, our artillery meanwhile played, and the enemy answered vigorously. Our volunteers frequently make night sorties; disturb the enemy in their trenches, and compel them to leave off working."

The Vienna Presse publishes the following, dated Constantinople, Feb. 14:—"It is reported that Lord Raglan has tendered his resignation. On the 12th General Peliasser sent a message to Paris, stating that no successful attempt could be made on Sebastopol for a month to come.

The large barracks of Smyrna are being cleared out and prepared for the reception of our own troops, expected shortly from India by way of Suez and Alexandria; and two schemes are under consideration for the establishment of hospitals, also for our own men, at Mitylene and Rhodes, than either of which no natural situation could be finer for such a purpose.

The accidental death of Major C. C. Young, returned from the Crimea, and on his way to join his wife and family at the Isle of Wight, is reported as having occurred, by falling from the window of his bed room at the Fountain Hotel in Portsmouth. Feeling unwell in the night, he rose, dressed himself, and opening the window, which was four stories high, he called a policeman to inquire whether he could get over to the Isle. It is supposed that vertigo caused him to loose his balance.

Strength of the Allied Army and Condition of the Troops.

The numerical strength of the allied army has been reinforced to a considerable extent, and notwithstanding the heavy loss sustained by disease, an array of not less than 90,000 bayonets is encamped at this moment before Sebastopol. The sufferings of both the British and French have considerably declined, and convalescents are commencing to pour in from Scutaria and Constantinople. Doubtless we have been reduced by hardships and want to a sad extremity, but, with the clemency of the weather, thousands of brave soldiers, at present stretched on the bed of sickness at Balaklava and Scutari, will be enabled to rejoin their colors. Great as have been the sufferings of our brave army, they must have been surpassed by those endured by the enemy; and when reflections are cast upon the weak condition of the allies, it must be submitted that the Russian soldiers in the Crimea are languishing from the same effects. We believe that the commissariat and medical departments in the Russian service have not experienced any considerable improvement since the last war with Turkey, when in two campaigns, above 100,000 soldiers perished from sickness and famine alone. This is but a sad consolation to our own army; but, inasmuch as the present condition of the enemy will reflect upon the approaching operations, the circumstance in question must be taken into consideration.

Kossuth's Opinions on the War.

The New York Times of Thursday contains another letter from the great Hungarian, from which we make the following extracts:—

And do you know why Bonaparte went to the Orient? Why, there you have it in the dispatch of the French foreign minister, (Dronyn de L'huys) to his representative at London, (Count Walewski) October 4, 1853:—"We go to the east in order to make the Sultan abstain from appealing either to religious feelings or to fatal auxiliaries." The religious feeling means "the patriotic valor of the Turkish nation;" and by the "fatal auxiliaries," are meant the historically national allies of Turkey—the Hungarian, Polish and Italian nationalities, and as their particular representatives, your undersigned obedient servant, and Joseph Mazzini.

Revolution was the mother of the Bonaparte family. Both the uncle and the nephew have murdered her; and the blood-stained crimson couch of the assassin is haunted by the spectre of the murdered mother. The complications in the Orient were about to resuscitate some solitary offsprings of murdered revolution. Rather anything, cried Bonaparte, aghast; and he went to the east to prevent the Sultan's appealing to the "fatal auxiliaries." That is the key of the position that explains everything.

* * * *

And worse will yet come. Of two things one, either Bonaparte, with England in his wake, does not succeed in his policy of alliances, so as to make them dangerous to the czar, or he does succeed. If he does not succeed, then he falls by the czar; England has no army more, and England and Bonaparte are not able without allies to cope with the czar offensively; that is already a matter of fact; whereas, if he succeeds in his policy of alliances, so as to cause serious apprehensions to Russia, and he falls by what he desired to avoid.

* * * *

Men of America, be prepared for great events! And if you desire to have a future, be prepared to reserve it, or else you, likewise, will be swept away by the inexorable logic of events.

I will conclude by giving you some signs indicative of the shadows of coming events.

The French army in the Crimea is trembling on the brink of a military revolt.

The war is not popular in France. Palmerston, at his late visit to Paris, was so much stricken at this fact that he advised the Emperor to resort to some "constitutional concessions;" but he fears to paint the evil one on the wall—he might step down, of course.

The unpopularity is such that not one volunteer recruit is to be had in warlike France, either for love or money. The "conscripts" betake themselves to their heels by hundreds. Their families are made responsible, and can get no substitute under 6000 francs (about $1,200.)

At Paris, between the "garde" and the "line," a dozen duels day by day.

Difference and division in the head-quarters of Bonapartism, and in the very midst of the family. Fould and Morny are for peace at any price. The emporer is for war, but only as "a simple diversion a l' esprit public," and therefore, a war restricted to the Crimea, and to the Pruth at the utmost, just as Louis Phillippe desired to make the war in Algeria. Certain members of the "family" tell him that this is as much as to lose the only real army he has, and to expose France to a coalition, without having any force to oppose but raw recruits, badly led, because it is a fact that he has no generals (the Cavaignaes, Changarniers, Lamoricieres, Bedeaus, Leffos, Charrases, remaining irreconcilable.) The Emperor asks—"Well, what is to be done?" Some of the family answer—"Recall the army from the Crimea; leave the English to do in the east as they can, and a 'Polish campaign' with the whole of the resources we have left," Upon this the Emperor gets into a fit, and shouts—"So you advise revolution? d——n you, rather than Nicholas." And he sends for the lawyer, Bentmont, and orders him to draw up a memorial showing that Morny, after being Morny for forty-six years, is his own legitimate brother, a full blood Bonaparte, the next heir to the throne, upon the principle of the Roman law, Pater est quem mytiæ demonstrant.—Very likely you will have soon some Bonapartes in America again, probably without passports, if the people will let them go.

THE HUNGARIAN.

BY AUGUSTE DE GERANDO.

The dignity of the Hungarian is that of the Oriental. He is grave like the Turk. This dignity suits perfectly the physiognomy of the Hungarians, which announces their Asiatic origin. Tall and muscular, they have the purely Oriental tpye: the aquiline nose, the black mustache, the full face, and the open forehead. Their step is at the same time grave and firm, and their gestures, by reason of this very gravity, never want nobleness.

The Hungarian proverb says the Magyar is born a horseman. Never was proverb more true. The people of this country believe a man is not a man if he be not a horseman.

At four years old the child is placed on a horse. He grasps the mane of the animal with his little hands, and as soon as he feels himself well seated, he does not hesitate to excite him with his voice. On the day that he can gallop without falling, his father says to him gravely, "Ember vagy"—"Thou art a man." At these words the child feels himself a foot taller. He grows up with the idea that he is a man and a Hungarian—two titles which impose obligations. A man, he is called to the honor of being a horseman and of bearing arms; a Hungarian, he must remember that he is superior to all, and that he must do nothing derogatory. The sentiment of pride which animated his ancestors subsists as the other results of the conquest. He has therefore the consciousness of his value and dignity. To be convinced of it, you have only to hear his language. The word "honor"—"besculet"—recurs constantly. All that he does is "besculetes,"—"worthy of a man of honor." When he has carried you at a gallop for a whole stage, do not think he will demand his fee. He detaches his horse, uncovers his head politely, and, addressing you in his figurative language, wishes you a good journey. You will have to call him back to give him the money he has earned, and however little you may give him he will not remonstrate. That would not be besculetes. It does not enter into the ideas of honor of the Magyar to be either eager for gain like the German, or indolent like the Wallach. He works honorably like a man who has a family to support. He brings to the village the grain of which his wife will make his bread, the hemp of which she will spin his garments. In the evening, when he has well employed his day, he smokes before his door, caressing his moustache.

If he is master in his house, he does not the less treat with kindness those whom he calls his people. He is gentle, like all the strong. He never ill-treats his wife, never subjects her to rude labor. She knows that she has in a him a support, a protector, and she receives from him the most tender names: rozsam, my rose; csillagom, my star; gyongyom, my pearl. The Magyar language, full of metaphors, like all the Asiatic languages, contain a great many expressions of this kind. It contains, besides, a great number of polite forms, that are addressed to neighbors, to friends, to guests.

If you stop in a village you will see one of the inhabitants, the one before whose door you may have stationed yourself, advance toward you, take off his hat, and offer you hospitality. When you quit him he will address you his thanks in a discourse which he will call down upon you the benediction of Heaven. All this with a wonderful ease, and that dignity which only belongs to the Orientals.

The men of this privileged race have a natural nobility which puts them on a level with the stranger who addresses them, whoever he may be. They have a reserve of language which surprises us in men without cultivation; a coarse peasantry would never come into their mind. Nature has endowed them with an easy eloquence, which gives force and vivacity to the expression of their sentiments. Whether they express joy or give vent to anger, the words flow sonorously from their lips. To welcome a guest or to curse an enemy, they find an abundance of smiles and epithets—the most polite phrases, the most energetic terms. It is true their language aids them marvelously. Poetic and melodious, it is not the less capable of expressing the most manly sentiments. Certain terminations which mark the plural give it sometimes a character of harshness, while, from the abundance of vowels, it is usually very soft. According to what he wishes to express, the Hungarian can, by laying stress on one or another syllable, employ at will a harsh or a harmonious language.

I have more than once noticed the elevation of ideas and sentiments in these men whom their nature alone aspires. The Hungarian peasant is usually sober of words; he never becomes familiar; but he is frank and loyal, and if he recognises a friend in you, he will open his heart to you with sincerity. You will then be struck with the expressions which will escape him, with the sentiments that he will utter without an idea that he is strongly captivating your attention, and it will be easy for you, in your turn, to excite in him lively emotions. It is that there are, in the heart of this nation, noble chords, which vibrate to the first contact of an elevated sentiment, a generous idea.

Caution!!!

From information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy, to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement, made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangement as colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it, men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

A correspondent of the Anti-Slavery Standard, writing from Philadelphia, gives the following account of the return of a fugitive, &c.

We had a slave here the other day, in which our Mayor acted very creditably. A woman eloped from New Orleans with a free white man (an Irishman, to the credit of his country, be it said,) who took a deep interest in her welfare, and who was willing to peril his life for her sake. They took passage in a vessel bound for Philadelphia. The flight of the couple was discovered, and requisitions were sent on from the Executive of Lousiana, one of which was directed to the Police Department of Philadelphia. Descriptions were given, at the same time, of the party and the manner of their escape; and, with these descriptions and this authority, one or more (I do not know how many) of our Philadelphia policemen boarded the vessel, and arrested the man and the woman, putting the latter in the prison at Newcastle, as a fugitive slave, and bringing the former to Philadelphia, and incarcerating him here, on the charge of being a fugitive from justice. As soon as the facts were known, Passmore Williams, the vigilant and indefatigable Secretary of the old Abolition Society, wrote to a friend of the Governor, at Harrisburg, to use his influence to prevent the granting of a warrant on the Lousiana Governor's requisition; being well assured that the charge of crime was only a slaveholders ruse to get possession of and punish one who had interfered in an obnoxious way with their institution. Mr. William's letter had come too late. Governor Pollock, not suspecting the trick (he will be wiser the next time) had granted the warrant, and the successful applicant had returned to Philadelphia to execute it. But "all's not lost that is in danger." The next morning, the papers contained the following note, which will explain itself:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, Phil., March 6th, 1855.

MR. SAM'L JOHNSON—Dear Sir: With the kindest feelings for you personally, and with great respect for your character as an officer, it is proper that I should inform you that if you act as the agent of Lousiana to return Warwick, charged with encouraging the escape of a fugitive slave from that State, I will consider it my duty to discharge you immediately from the police service of this city.

Yours respectfully,
R. T. CONARD, Mayor.

This, of course, blocked the whole game. The next day, David Paul Brown and some one else had the man brought out on habeas corpus, and, no one appearing against him, he was discharged from custody. The woman, poor soul, did not fare so well. A letter before me from Thomas Garrett, who was written to by Mr. Williamson on the subject, says:

"——Immediately on hearing the case, I took a lawyer and went over to Newcastle, but she was gone. They had had her before the Commissioner, early in the morning, who granted a certificate, and she was put on board a vessel bound from Philadelphia for New Orleans, soon after sunrise. I am sorry I could do nothing to aid the woman."

This was bad; but there is some comfort in having a Mayor who will talk to his officers in the style of the above note. I hope this will be the last case in which our Police department will be disgraced by its officers turning slave-catchers, either within or without the bounds of their jurisdiction.

We had hoped to have Theodore Parker to lecture for us, in the course of this month, but the postponement of his trial before the Boston Court till April makes it doubtful whether we shall have the pleasure of hearing him here before May. He is expected in another part of the state during that month, and, if he should come, he will probably kill two birds with one stone, by taking that occasion to speak for us in Philadelphia, as he passes through.

Yours ever truly. M.

The Mayor of Kingston Unseated.

In the Court of Common Pleas held at Kingston, Judge McKenzie decided last Thursday, that the officiating Mayor of Kingston was illegally in possession of that dignity, on the ground of his being a stockholder in the amount of £140 12s. 6d. in the City of Kingston Gas Light Company, which Company supplies the City with gas. We believe this decision will affect other sitting members of the Kingston City Council.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM,—As the Second Volume of the Provincial Freeman has made its appearance in an improved condition, some of its friends and patrons have concluded to call a Public Meeting, next Wednesday night, the 28th instant, in the 2nd Wesleyan Chapel, Richmond Street, to which the public are respectfully invited, in order that its friends may have an opportunity to explain its conduct through the past year, as some of its last year's subscribers seem dissatisfied with its course.

By order of a number of citizens.

MISS M. A. SHADD:

DEAR MADAM,—Since it is now obvious that your efforts in Editing and Publishing a Newspaper have been successful—at any rate your pledge that it should continue for one year has been fully redeemed—I trust it may not be amiss, therefore, to congratulate you on entering upon your second volume. That you have had formidable difficulties to contend with, in relation to your enterprise, none will doubt who have the least idea of how much labour, activity, and ability that is required to fill the post of Editor, Publisher, and Financier, all at the same time. These responsibilities have, doubtless, kept your hands full of labour and your mind filled with cares and anxiety. How you have thus long and well succeeded, to me is a matter of wonder.

As I glance over the wrecks which have marked the career of not a few of the "sterner sex," who have at different times attempted to establish Presses for the advocacy of the rights of the oppressed, facts stares me in the face on every hand, that in almost every instance those enterprises have hopelessly failed ere they had existed twelve months—indeed most of them before six months. In consequence of the failures alluded to, which are fresh in the minds of all who have observed the movements of our cause, especially our public men, doubtless your enterprise has suffered materially. Many, when solicited to subscribe to your paper, have readily found excuses for refusing, on the ground that they had subscribed to ——'s paper, which soon died of bad management; next subscribed to a similar one, started by "C." which only survived a few weeks; again, had subscribed to dishonest or careless agents, who had kept the money—hence no paper came at all. Thus many have turned the cold shoulder, or have resolved not to subscribe until they should be convinced that the paper would live, through evil as well as good report, for at least one year. Others have stood aloof, as they always have done, bound never to risk a dollar with any body, for the cause of humanity, however clear the evidence might be that demanded help at their hands; and that great good would result from their timely co-operation. Another class, however, have willingly, or by entreaty, subscribed, trusting that a sufficient degree of interest would be felt, on the part of those seeking the elevation of the colored man to make the effort potent and permanent. To do this, comparatively, but very little in the way of material aid is required, taking into account the many who are able to pay for a paper, and whose duty it is to aid in this department of the Anti-Slavery cause. But small as is the amount required, and as few as are the individuals who could easily meet the demands, nevertheless, it is a fact not to be denied or concealed, that, as a general thing, the masses of our people are quite indifferent as to whether their Presses are supported or not.

With regard to the regularity of the "Provincial Freeman," its visits have been punctual, at least to your subscribers in this City; and as the first volume is now completed, those who commenced with its beginning have already received what they bargained for. It is to be hoped, therefore, that all will feel encouraged, and will renew their subscriptions immediately. The interest in the minds of thousands, in the States, in relation to Canada, for various reasons, increases daily.

How important and indispensably necessary it is, therefore, that a direct medium of information should be kept up—such as the Provincial Freeman designs to do. Here allow me to remark, I do hope, in the future, that you may be delivered from a certain class of "Agents," from whom you have received names, but no money; said Agents having appropriated it to their own use. What an extraordinary lover of freedom he must be who can lend himself to the base trick of swindling the Publisher of an Anti-Slavery Paper! Nevertheless, according to statements which I have repeatedly seen in the Freeman, and from my own knowledge, you have been considerably imposed upon in this way.

In conclusion, as you have given so much evidence of devotion and faithfulness to the interest of the enslaved, by your unceasing efforts to establish and maintain a Press, especially to promote their welfare, allow me to say, as a friend and individual, I feel the most ardent desire that your labours may yet be crowned with the most triumphant success. And I shall always take pleasure in doing what I can to aid and encourage you in your enterprise.

Yours, truly, W. S.

A few Thoughts for the Consideration of Emigrationists.

I take it for granted that the object of the "Emigrationists," is the elevation of that portion of the African race, or their descendants, to be found in the United States; North and South, bond and free. On seeking a remedy for any evil, the best plan is to find first the cause, and the cessation of the cause is frequently the best remedy.

The evil to be remedied, is that prejudice which exists in the American mind against the colored man, and induces the social and political proscription, under which we suffer. Let us first seek the cause. One cause assigned by a recent writer in the Provincial Freeman, and by many abler persons, is the "Color" of our people. I will not stop here, to argue the truthfulness of that position, but apply it to the dogmas of my friends the "Emigrationists." First then, our color is the cause of prejudice; then wherever we go that prejudice will arise; for wherever we go we carry our color with us. Let it be France, England, or Canada, wherever the prevalent complexion is different from ours, and we may expect prejudice. Persons holding that opinion to be logical, should advocate emigration to Africa, where the color would be a recommendation instead of a disadvantage. They should advocate emigration to Africa or amalgamation.

Another class there is, who assign as the cause of prejudice, the "Condition" of our people. To this idea I myself incline. I do not mean by the word "Condition," to embrace the idea of our social and political proscription, or the slavery in which a portion of us are held; but that Ignorance and Poverty, and their consequent degradation, which to a lamentable degree, characterises our people wherever found. I will not here assign a reason for this ignorance and degranation; whether the recent savageism of our progenitors, or the cruel captivity we have suffered; but as in the former case, apply this cause to the positions of the "Emigrationists."

Condition then we assume is the cause of prejudice. Any considerable number of our people moving, or an en masse emigration, would carry with them their condition, and wherever they settle, whether in England, France or Canada, or any country where the resident population is superior to us in the elements of wealth, and intelligence, prejudice will at once arise. Is not this true of Canada? does not social proscription increase in the same proportion as the colored population? I know you will say that none but run-away Yankees manifest this prejudice; but I have been creditably informed, that white laborers in the vicinity of Dresden, have refused to eat at the same table with colored laborers. Here, we find prejudice among the laborers, and yet the Yankees in Canada, are not generally found among the laboring classes.

I do not deny that one family of wealth and intelligence, or perhaps a hundred such families, might settle in spots of the earth comparatively free from proscription; but we are considering an en masse emigration, and our people are deficient in wealth and intelligence. But says the caviller, in the Canadas, where all are equal before the law, the chances for obtaining wealth and education, are better than in the United States, where the laws are proscriptive. Softly, sir; the laws are but a portion of the effects of prejudice, it is social proscription that bars the path to wealth and intelligence, in the United States; as witness Massachusetts and other States, where the laws make but little distinction, yet social proscription retards our progress, almost as effectually as the laws of South Carolina. Now let this prejudice but arise in Canada, as it must, should we emigrate en masse, carrying with us our condition, and although the laws may remain liberal, social proscription will bear as heavily upon us there as here. Some, I know, only desire the emigration of those who possess some wealth and intelligence; but that is not emigration en masse. Again it is claimed, that in a country where the laws bear equally on all, we would combine more readily in action for our enslaved brethren. To this I demur, if we do not unite now, when almost forced to by the pressure of prejudice, we will not when that pressure is removed, and we are left to be swayed by the motives that usually shape political action. We would array ourselves as Liberals or Conservatives, the same as our white fellow citizens. As we find in the United States colored men silly enough to vote K. N. tickets.

If it is proposed to elevate the great mass of our people, and prepare them by the practice of economy, and the diffusion of knowledge, to emigrate, you are taking just the steps for preparing them to remain. The exertion and training that would fit them to emigrate would fit them to remain. If we emigrate as we are, the task of elevating ourselves would not be lessened, by a simple change of locality.

The true remedies for our ills are a fair share of the wealth of the country, intelligence and UNION.

Before closing, I must notice a statement of your correspondent, S. A. Lowery, that does Mr. J. I. Gaines great injustice.

The challenge which Mr. Gaines gave, was to bring under discussion the Cleveland platform—the project of going to South or Central America, where new governments are established every new moon—the nonsense about establishing a nationality in countries already in the possession of nations—the platform that speaks of Canada as a temporary resting place. And when he was met in a meeting, called without consulting him, with propositions he had not denied in his challenge, he of course declined debating them.

For truth,

P. H. C.

Cincinnati, March 2, 1855.

Emigration.

No. IV.

"If in England, learn of her prevailing notions. If in France, or the United States, of theirs."

"Do not speak in England against Queens, or Dukes, or Lords; in France against Counts or Admirals, or military heroes; in the States of the Union against quasi Democracy; that is, the Democracy that degrades one-sixth of the whole population to the condition of a serf. We must conform ourselves to things as they are, and not hope, in passing, to complete a reformation in the body politic during the few brief hours we have to live."

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the North-wind's breath,
And stars to set—but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

Let, then, our Emigration friends cease their crusade, and turn their attention to a legitimate business. Let them teach us not to whine like cats for the whits man's beef, but to create beef for ourselves; that we must lean on our own strong arm, or we will ever remain, as a class, poor, despised and degraded. In 1700, Manchester, in England, was but a child to what she is now. It is true it had large churches and commodious school houses; but the population, bustle, wealth, intelligence, now in the year 1855, that characterizes that great emporium, had no existence. Mr. Macaulay says:—"It then had not a single press: it now supports a hundred printing establishments! It then had not a single coach: it now supports twenty coach-makers." Birmingham, Leeds, York, and other English cities, have also more than quadrupled in all the elements of greatness. Now, why is this? Why do those cities excel the principal towns in Mexico, Spain, South America, or the West Indies? Because their inhabitants are more energetic and self-reliant, and as a consequence thereof, their good deeds radiate in every direction like the rays of the sun. You say that the negro in America is cramped; that he cannot rise, even if he desired. (And you, especially, say that I have abandoned the "no-prejudice against color ground, by the admission that it exists in the States.") This is a sheer mistake, and I cannot conceive how you could torture my words into such a monstrous meaning. I admitted the existence of prejudice in the States, not against color; but condition, as the context will show. Your short rejoinder is petitio principi, begging the question, This buzzard tale has been hawked about the streets so much, that good, quiet-meaning people have taken it like honey.

Have we no coal merchants, no turners, no bedstead makers, no blacksmiths, no carpenters, no daguerreotypists, no grocers, no tradesmen, and no artists? Do we not get as much for labor as other persons in like occupations, and as much to do, if we will do it? Do we not average from ten to a hundred dollars per month? Indeed, we make more in a year at menial occupations than do our German neighbors in two, at scraping the streets, mending shoes, selling sour creut, &c., and yet they have out-stripped us in wealth. The wealth of the colored people in Cincinnati (five thousand in number) is about one and a half million of dollars; the wealth of an equal number of Germans, of the same place, is more than thrice the amount. We must study political economy, and learn therefrom the art of saving, if we would be anything in the States, or Canada. "The blacks should get money. Let them go into the trades—become farmers, manufacturers;—where capital and employment are wanting, let them combine, and thus diminish the expense of living, and increase their productive power. Action—action—action—must be the panacea for your present woes, and the sesame of future regeneration."—(Extract from a letter of C. M. Clay, of Kentucky, to a Convention of Colored Freemen of Ohio, held in Cincinnati, January 14th, 1852.)

Now, gentlemen of the Emigration party, you might as well commence the good work first as last, for commence you must. Must, I say, is the word. The people will not leave the States, en masse, to try the cold but balmy regions of Canada; to bask in old Sol's rays in the tropics, or to lie beside pumpkins in the British West Indies. Now for the evidence:

In 1852, the Colored Men's, Convention of Ohio passed the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That this is our native land—the land of our birth; and inasmuch as birth gives citizenship, according to the decision of the Supreme Court, it is our duty to contend for our rights, as American citizens, by all the moral and physical means which God has given us."

And I will here remark, that all the conventions that have been held in the State of Ohio, among the colored people, from 1840 to 1855, have reiterated the same patriotic sentiment. In 1853, the National Convention, which was held in Rochester, New York, passed by an almost unanimous vote this resolution:—

"Resolved, That, as for the American Colonization Society, we have no sympathy with it, having long since determined to plant our trees on American soil, and repose beneath their shade."

Now, who were among the members of this convention? Frederick Douglass, James McCune Smith, M. D., Charles B. Ray, Wm. H. Day, Peter H. Clark, Prof. G. B. Vashon. Dr. Pennington, Charles H. Reason, Louis Woodson, Wm. J. Willson, Geo. T. Downing, Amos G. Beeman, Wm. C. Nell, Charles Lenox Remond, John Mercer Langhston, Chas. Langhston, and a host of other spirits, equally as noble, who, for learning, eloquence, talents, et cetera, are not inferior to any other class of men in the country. Indeed, so strong are the people's propensity for that they will not remove from one State to another for the sake of freedom. They desire, it is true, to be free; but they sigh for it around the hearth-stones of their fathers. In those States where the laws are the most oppressive, the largest number live. Maryland has a colored population (free) of 74,723; Massachusetts, 9,064; in Virginia there are 54,333, and 718 in Vermont. In Maryland the man of color has neither his vote nor oath; in Massachusetts he has. In a word, the one State is a very despotism—the other, a kind of a goddess of liberty.

I know a few thousand colored persons have emigrated to Canada; but who were they, and under what influence did they go? As a rule, they were American slaves, and they went there as a refuge from the American oppressor. Had even their personal liberty been protected in the States, not one in a hundred would now be in Canada. I have observed how colored people group together in cities; that where you find one family you generally find many. And I have sometimes thought that it was caused by virtue of an instinct inherited from our forefathers, because it is a well-known historical fact, that the black man in his own native country never emigrates.

I speak, however, of a fact, and I am willing that persons more curious than myself should divine, if they can, the cause; for sufficient unto the hour are the things thereof. I will bring this paper to a close, by simply remarking, that our "folks" remind me of an engine (looking at them in a national light) whose several parts are well knit together; but if you would have it move, you must apply steam: so does it require steam to move them.

GAINES.

Cincinnati, March, 3rd., 1855.

From the Liberator.

A Personal Letter from our Southern Correspondent.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 10, 1855.

EDITORS STANDARD: I have resided in this city for two weeks past, but have not yet found time to reply to your private note or to write a letter for the Standard. I shall soon resume my regular correspondence. In the meantime, permit me publicly to allude to several circumstances, in relation to my published letters, of which my friends have informed me by post, since you commenced to print my correspondence.

My travelling individually and veracity have been doubted, I am informed. I can only reply to these charges, that I have actually travelled over the routes mentioned by me and in the manner indicated; and that I wrote all the letters you published, in this city or State from which each is dated. Every conversation that I have recorded was an accurate report of my talks with slaves. Every question and every answer published in the Standard was asked by me and answered by the slaves in the Southern States.

On my honor as a gentleman, I declare that not one false statement or fictitious incident is contained in any of my letters. If they contain any errors of fact—and I do not believe they do—I am not responsible for these mistakes.

One of my friends states that the faith of some good people in my veracity has been shaken by my statments concerning the pedestrian journey I have made. They cannot understand, says he, how any man should prefer to go on foot rather than by rail. Did these good people never hear of the post-Collegiate pedestrian journeys of the students of Germany? Every educated youth of that great nation makes a great tour on foot after finishing his Collegiate Education. Every English aristocratic youth of fortune is fond of similar excurtions. Young America is too busy money-making to follow their example. But I am not engaged in doing so; money is my aversion—knowledge my wealth. I have sought it in the cotton fields of the South as well as in the libraries of the North. Walking is one of my greatest pleasures. Goldsmith, the pedestrian as well as poet, justly observed that a country could not be seen from a carriage window. I knew this fact from previous experience; and accordingly I adopted the only mode of travelling in a country by which accurate information of it can be gathered—"I footed it."

Another friend advises me to be more soberphrased; because my want of sobriety detracts from the moral weight of the facts I furnish. Our good leader, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, was the original advances of this argument. There is some truth in it; but still I cannot act on it, simply because my letters are a faithful mirror of my feelings at the time of writing them. When I am older, I shall be sober enough, I expect; but, at present, "I'm one of the boys and cannot be anything else."

I defy the united slavocracy of the South to prove that I have spoken falsely. Many facts that I have advanced will be doubted or denied; but whoever will follow in my footsteps and speak with the slaves as I spoke to them, and as frequently as I did, will find that I have been a most truthful chronicler.

Yours truly,

JOHN BALL., JR.

DARING OUTRAGES.—On the night of Sunday last, between the hours of 9 and 10, a gang of four ruffians attacked the house of Mr. Christian Barns, near Stewart, Esquesing.—Having broken open the door, the party, one of whom carried a dark lantern, advanced to the bed occupied by Mr. Barns, and demanded the sum of $240, which he had received that day from a person who had purchased land of him. Finding resistance useless, the money was accordingly delivered up to the ruffians, who then decamped with the additional spoil of a $20 gold piece which they found in a carpet bag. About twelve o'clock of the same night, a party, supposed to be the same gang who perpetrated the above outrage, entered the house of Mr. R. W. Mathews, near the Scots Brock. At the first alarm he jumped out of bed, and, in conjunction with his wife, stoutly attacked the miscreants. During the scuffle, Mr. M. contrived to kick under the bed his trowsers, in which he had between $200 and $300. Though the robbers overpowered their victims, they failed in obtaining the booty which they sought for. The fight must have been hotly contested, the floor being found in the morning to be literally spattered with blood. Mr. Mathews received several severe cuts, but we are happy to learn that he has not been seriously injured.—Streetsville Review.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT ON THE SOUTH DEVON RAILWAY.—On Friday morning an accident of a most extensive character occurred on the South Devon Railway, near Teignmouth. A heavy gale from the south-east, coming with the spring-tides caused alarming damage to the line. Apprehensions was felt lest the sea-wall might give way. The wall was found to have bulged to the extent of 12 or 14 inches, and the sand was fast being washed from the foundation. The mail-train passed down in safety, followed shortly by the luggage train, which also escaped. Between six and seven, however, the sea-wall, for upwards of fifty feet in length, fell with a tremendous crash, carrying with it the promenade, the rails, and the telegraph wires and posts, which were all washed out into the sea. The red rock upon which the wall was built had been fretted away. Another part of the wall, to the extent of about 100 feet, is expected to follow, and the consequence will be a serious impediment to the traffic.

Central America.

We perceive that the American Consul, and a party of Americans, have respectively got into difficulties on the Atlantic and Pacific sides of the Isthmus—the Consul with the Nicaraguan authorities at San Juan del Sad, and the Crissot party with the authorities of the other San Juan.

Not many years since, the United States Government and people were the much-admired models of the whole continent south of us. Mexico, the Central American, and South American States, all looked up to and revered our Government as the great head of the American political church. Now we are fast becoming, if we have not already become, the general dread and detestation. Such are the inevitable fruits of a selfish and ever-grasping policy, in public as in private life.—Saturday Evening Post.

PENNSYLVANIA.—The memorial of 30,000 colored citizens of Philadelphia, asking for the same right of suffrage they enjoyed for 47 years, prior to the adoption of the present Constitution in 1838, has been presented to the Legislature. The paper is well written, and forcible in its arguments, and, we presume, was drawn forth by the introduction of a bill into the Legislature to give to that class the right to vote, under certain restrictions. They claim to number 30,000 persons in Philadelphia; to possess $2,685,093 of real and personal estate; to have paid $9,776 42 for taxes during the past year, and $896,782 27 for house, water and ground rents, and to possess something more than brute instinct. Copies of this pamphlet have been laid upon the desks of the members.—Anti-Slavery Standard.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command,
R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,
R S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16TH VIC. CAP. 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. And that the following Packages are to be exempt from payment of Duty, viz: Bales, Trusses, Cases covering Casks of Wines or Brandy in Wood, Cases and Casks containing Dry Goods, Hardware or Cutlery, Crates and Casks containing Glassware and Earthenware, Cases containing Bouled Wine or Bottled Spirits, and all other packages in which the goods are not usually exposed for sale, or which do not necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold.

By Command,
F. HINCKS, Inspector Gen.

IV. And be it enacted, That spirits and strong waters having the flavour of any kind of spirits or strong waters subject to higher duty than that imposed on Whiskey, shall be liable to the duty imposed on the kind of spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor as aforesaid, from whatever substance they may be distilled or prepared; but nothing in this Section shall be construed as a declaration that spirits and Strong waters so flavored, were or were not before the passing of this Act subject to the duty imposed on those of which they have the flavor.

PROSPECTUS OF THE CANADA FARMER,

A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing clases on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st To promote a healthy harmony and to cultivate a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of a lighter complexion. And 3rd To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,

OR,

The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,

A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS

Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

THE

Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE

American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,

Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-two pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic

When I and Kitty walked abraid,
An' Jamie walked atween,
We reached the brigg o'er yon wee linn,
Our bonny brigg sae sma';
"Jenny," said Jim, "mann wait behin,' There's nae room for twa."
"There's nae room for twa," said he,
"There's nae room for twa."
O, Jamie's words went to my heart,
"There's nae room for twa."

A weel a day my heart leaped high
When walkin' by his side;
Sic thoughts, alas! are idle now,
For Kitty is his bride.
He cou'd na, an' he wad na hae baith,
For that's forbid by law,
In wedded life, an' wedded love
There's nae room for twa.
There's nae room for twa, ye ken,
There's nae room for twa;
So hae gang'd nae gate alane,
There's hae room for twa.

The creepin' years hae slowly pass'd,
An' I hae struggled strang,
Wi' a broken hope an' a broken heart,
But it is nae now o'er lang:
My thread o' life is a' but span,
An' I maun gang awa',
An' moulder in the clay cauld ground
Where's nae room for twa,
The narrow bed where all maun lie,
Has nae room for twa.

Dear Kitty on thy bony brow
The simmer sun shall shine;
While wintry clouds and winter's gloom
Are gathering dark o'er mine,
I'll gae to God my lingering hours,
An' Jamie drive awa,
For in this weary, wasted heart,
There's nae room for twa;
There's nae room for twa ye ken,
There's nae room for twa;
The heart that's gie'n to God and heaven
Has nae room for twa.

The Rattlesnake and its Congeners.

CONCLUDED.

The most extraordinary story of snake fascination was recently related by a St. Louis paper of a black snake seven feet six inches long, and a young girl thirteen years of age, which resulted in a fearful tragedy. The father of the child lived in Franklin County, Missouri. The fact was first noticed, that the young girl from perfect health; began to decline, and finally wasted away to a mere skeleton. On the arrival of the spring she could not be prevailed upon to eat in the house, but insisted upon taking her bread and meat to the banks of a neighbouring creek. The neighbours having heard of the child's extraordinary conduct, and also of her wasted appearance, suggested to her father to watch her movements, which was done on a succeeding Friday. The child had been sitting on the bank of the creek nearly all the forenoon until near dinner time, when she got up, went to the house, asked for a piece of bread and butter, and again returned to her place of watching. The father stealthily followed the child, and to his horror saw a huge black snake slowly raise its head into the child's lap, and receive the bread and butter from her hand; and when she would attempt to take a bite of the bread, the snake would become very angry, when the child, trembled like a leaf, would promptly return the food to the monster. The father was completely paralyzed, not being able to move hand or foot; the blood fairly clogged in his veins, and he groaned in agony. This caused the snake to become alarmed, and it glided away into the creek and disappeared. Upon being questioned, the child refused, or appeared incapable of giving any answer. It was finally determined that the child should go again the next day, and that the snake should be allured ashore and killed. The next morning the child took the bread to the creek as usual, and the moment the monster made its appearance, the father, who was on the watch, fired and shot it through the head. The child swooned, the snake writhed about and died; the child recovered, and swooned and recovered, and swooned, and finally died, seeming in the greatest agony. Upon the facts the editor says: "This horrible, and at the same time melancholly occurrence, is the first we have heard of for a long time, and in fact the first we ever knew of where we could positively vouch for its truthful correctness. We know that there are persons who doubt the reality of such fascination, but if they entertain any doubts on this subject hereafter, the relations of this unfortunate little girl can be found ready and willing to corroborate our statement."

With the rattlesnake the excitement of charming is positively necessary to prepare the animal to take its food. Nature seems to have provided this strange peculiarity to call the saliva glands into action, and soften the muscles of the throat so as to give them the elasticity necessary for swallowing. A gentleman who had a large rattlesnake confined in a cage, after it had fasted for some months, gave it a half grown rat. To his surprise the snake took no notice of the intruder, and in a few hours they were living on peaceable terms. The rat ate its food with relish, and paid no attention to its disagreeable neighbor. After some two or three weeks the gentleman had his attention attracted to the cage by warlike sounds, and looking in, to his surprise he discovered the snake coiled up in the attitude of defiance, its head waving to and fro, its eyes glistening with anger, and its rattle making a continual hum. The rat, meanwhile, as if conscious of its doom, exhibited every symptom of terror, and yet constantly approached its enemy. The reptile having finally prepared itself for the fatal blow, darted with lightning rapidity upon the poor quadruped, and soon engulphed it in its capacious throat. This example is satisfactory, that the snake, as we have already suggested, is obliged to go through the excitement attendant upon what is termed charming, to be able to take its food; for it could at any time, for weeks previous, and without ceremony, have snapped up the rat as it lay all the day long sleeping upon the floor of the cage.

A Southern gentleman, who took a great deal of interest in the habits of rattlesnakes, mentions that a negro once brought him one and offered it for sale. To show the size and beauty of the creature, he took it out of the small wooden box in which it was confined, and fearlessly let the serpent loose upon the ground. The reptile began to glide in a sinuous, undulating, but gentle course along the veranda. Seeing it approach the limits of the adjoining premises, the negro was ordered to bring the reptile back. Obeying the injunction, the man immediately recaptured the snake, which he effected by applying his fingers to the back of its head. The gentleman, upon examining the snake attentively, discovered two long and terrible fangs projecting from the upper jaw, which he had understood the negro to say had been extracted. The negro, upon being told of the danger he ran in seized the snake with his naked hand, replied, "that there was never any danger when the snake was not coiled up and prepared for a spring."

Audubon, to prove that serpents can not fascinate, relates that he had a rattlesnake and a thrush confined in a large cage—so large, indeed, that the bird easily escaped out of the reach of the monster. For a long while the snake made vain attempts to catch its prey, and finally only succeeded by lying down close to the cup of water, and there waiting for the bird. The thrush showed great uneasiness, and would dash at the water and then retreat; it finally, as the great ornithologist thinks, fell a prey to its enemy while endeavoring to quench its thirst. Our conclusion is, that the snake never possessed intelligence enough to go through the complicated argument that the thrush must come to the cup of water or perish with thirst; on the contrary, the snake being near the water was an accident, and the bird, instead of dashing down to drink, was really in the toils of the charmer, and vainly struggling to make its escape.

Rattlesnakes have their antipathies, and those known are very strongly marked. In Texas, particularly between the Nueces and the Rio Grande, the largest rattlesnakes in the world exist, and at certain seasons of the year it is quite dangerous to "camp out" without due precaution. The inhabitants have many devices to protect themselves, but the most simple is encircling the place of bivouac with the long horse-hair halter. The snake will never cross this magic circle. In more northern latitudes, it has been found that the rattlesnake will not live where the white ash grows in abundance. It has even been the practice among hunters who traverse the forests in summer, to stuff their boots, moccasins, with white ash leaves, for the purpose of securing themselves against the snakes; and it is said that no person was ever bitten who resorted to this specific.

Judge Woodruff, formerly a resident of Ohio, relates that he was with a small party on the Mahoning river for the purpose of deer hunting. The party took their station on an elevated spot, fifteen or twenty yards from the water's edge. Here the men watched for the wished-for game; and while they were waiting, they saw a large rattlesnake, which had crawled out from among the rocks beneath them, and was slowly making his way across a narrow, smooth sand-bank toward the river. Upon hearing the voices of the men, the snake halted, and lay stretched out with his head near the water.

"It was now determined to try ash leaves. Accordingly search was made, and a small white ash sapling, eight or ten feet long, was procured; and, with a view to make the experiment more satisfactory, another sapling of maple was cut. In order to prevent the snake's retreat to his den, the Judge approached him in his rear, and when he had advanced within eight feet of him, the snake coiled up his body, elevated his head several inches, brandishing his tongue, and thus signified his readiness for battle. The Judge then presented his white ash wand, placing the leaves upon the body of the snake. The reptile instantly dropped his head upon the ground, unfolded his coil, rolled over upon his back, twitched and twisted his whole body in every form but that of a coil, and gave signs of being in great agony. The white ash was then laid by, upon which the snake immediately placed himself in a coil, and assumed the attitude of defence as before. The sugar-maple stick was next used; the snake darted forward in a twinkling, thrust his head 'with all the malice of the under fiends,' and the next moment coiled and lanced again, darting his whole length with the swiftness of an arrow. After repeating this several times, says the Judge, I changed his fare, and presented him the white ash. He immediately doused his peak, stretched himself on his back, and writhed his body in the same manner as at the first application.

"It was then proposed to try what effect might be produced upon his temper and courage by a little flogging with the white ash. This was administered, but, instead of arousing him to resentment, proved only to increase his troubles. As the flogging grew more severe, the snake frequently stuck his head into the sand as far as he could thrust it, and seemed desirous to bore into the earth and rid himself of his unwelcome visitors. Being now convinced that the experiment was a satisfactory one, and fairly conducted on both sides, we deemed it ungenerous to take his life after he had contributed so much to gratify our curiosity; and so we took our leave of the rattlesnake with feelings as friendly at least as those with which we commenced our acquaintance with him, and left him to return at leisure to his den."

The rattlesnake excites a great deal of alarm in the deer, and it is seldom that the buck will let it escape without giving battle. Their manner of attack is very curious and effective. The buck trots around the rattlesnake for some time, seemingly disposed to confuse the reptile, and then suddenly starting off will make a tremendous sweep, and coming near the snake will gather its four sharp hoofs into a point, and then springing eight or ten feet into the air, will land directly upon the coils of the snake, and then separating its feet with wonderful quickness and force, if the assault has been successful, the snake is cut into shreds.

Combats between the rattle and black snakes are certain if they meet, and the black snake is, with rare exceptions, the conqueror. Upon seeing each other, these animals instantly assume their respective attitudes of defence, and display the great difference in their organization. The rattlesnake coils itself up, ready for attack or defence; the black snake, being a constrictor, moves about from side to side, and is in constant activity—mutually exciting each others passions. The rattlesnake finally settles down into a glowing exhibition of animosity, its head thrown back, its fangs exposed, its rattles in constant agitation. The black snake, seemingly conscious that the moment of strife has come, now commences circling round its enemy, absolutely moving so swiftly that it seems but a gleam of dull light; the rattlesnake attempts to follow the movement, but soon becomes confused, and drops its head in despair: then it is that the black snake darts upon the back of the neck of its deadly foe, seizes it between its teeth, and springing upward, envelops the rattlesnake in its folds. The struggle, though not long, is painful: the combatants roll over in the dust, get entangled in the bushes; but every moment the black snake is tightning its hold, until the rattlesnake gasps for breath, becomes helpless, and dies. For a while the black snake still retains its grasp; you can perceive its muscles working with constant energy; but finally, it cautiously uncoils itself, and quietly betakes to the water, where recovering its energy, it dashes about a moment as if in exultation, and disappears from the scene.

Of all enemies with which the rattlesnake has to contend, except man, the hog is the most destructive. As of a litter with a litter of pigs to provide food for, will hunt for the reptile with a perseverance and sagacity truly astonishing, tracking them by their scent to their hiding-places and never letting them escape. In the west in early times, and now throughout the country, if rattlesnakes become troublesome in any locality, a drove of hogs are turned into their haunts, and the snakes soon disappear. The hog, when it sees a rattlesnake, instantly erects its bristles and back, and commences rattling its tusks. The snake accepts the challenge, and prepares for defence. The old porker seems to understand what part of its body are invulnerable to poison, so it gets down upon its knees, and in this awkward position deliberately crawls, by a sliding motion, up to the enemy. The snake darts forward, and the hog dexterously catches the fangs in the fat that swells out the jaws—the blow is repeated, and the hog having been smitten on one cheek, deliberately turns the other. This the animal continues to do until the snake has not only exhausted for the time being, its poison, but also its strength. The hog then deliberately rises from its knees, and now, regardless of consequences, seizes the serpent near the head, and putting its fore-foot upon its squirming body, strips the reptile through its teeth, and thus tears it to pieces. If the hog, as is sometimes the case, happens to be very lean, and the poison fangs thereby strike the circulation, it will die from the wound, but this conjunction rarely takes place.

"A very fine, large cotton-mouth snake, being captured, by tying a shoe-string around him, he became exceedingly ferocious, striking at even the crack of a small riding whip. Finding himself a prisoner, without hope of escape, he turned his deadly weapons on his own body, striking repeatedly his well charged fangs deeply into his own flesh. Notwithstanding this, he was put in a small basket, and carried forward. In one hour after he was found dead, and no amount of irritation could excite the least indication of life. Four hours after, while removing the skin for preservation, the blood oozed slowly from the vessels in a dissolved state. No violence was done to his snakeship except what he did to himself.

"A large rattlesnake, beheaded instantly with a hoe, would, an hour after, strike any thing that pinched its tail. Of several persons who were testing their firmness of nerve by trying to hold the hand steady while the serpent struck at it, not one could be found whose hand would not recoil in spite of his resolution; and one man—a great bully, by-the-by—was struck on the naked throat with considerable force by the headless trunk of the serpent, and staggered back, fainted and fell from terror. Mr. Stewart, of Mississippi, tells me he once witnessed a singular scene. An old hunter shot a rattlesnake's head off, and after reloading his gun and standing some time, he stooped to pull off the rattles, and the bloody but beadless trunk of the snake struck him in the temple, and he fainted and fell down with terror.

The vitality of the snake is a matter of observation with all acquainted with its habits. The negro of the plantations say that one never dies—no matter how much "killed"—until after sundown. Some flat-boatmen on one occasion captured a large black snake in the Tallahatchie river, and put it in a cage for the sake of amusing themselves with its struggles to escape. Accidentally finding a mole, about the size of a mouse, they put "the grounding" into the snake's cage. The reptile at once gulped it down, but the mole, making no difference between the sides of its prison house and the solid earth, much to the astonishment of the flat-boatmen, ate its way out of the snake's side; whereupon it was swallowed again, and again gnawed its way into daylight. The snake, getting a dinner under difficulties, once more titillated its throat with the oft repeated morsel, but with no more success of keeping it on its stomach than the Irishman had with the emetic. The fourth time, the snake vainly attempted to engulf its dinner, but was too much exhausted, and gave it up as an impossible job. The mole, so well calculated to make its way through the world, was put on shore as a reward for its bravery; and, if it ever thinks at all, must be very much amused at its adventures with the flat-boatmen on the roaring river of the sunny land of Florida.

Miscellaneous.

A New Flying Machine.

The Paris Patrie has the following:—The Academy of Sciences is a good deal interested by the invention of the flying machine, by Don Diego de Salamanca. With this machine, Don Diego's daughter, Rosanra, rose in the air, some time ago, at Madrid, to the great astonishment of the Spaniards, who were but little accustomed to this kind of miracle. Don Diego de Salamaca and his daughter are about to arrive at Paris, to show the effects of this marvellous invention. The machine is very simple; it consists in a case two feet long, and a foot wide, adapted to a band of leather round the wait, buckled behind. The two iron rods, fastened to the case, support a small piece of wood, on which the feet repose. The case contains a simple and ingenious mechanism, similar to that employed to set an automaton in motion. The mechanism is worked by a handle. It sets in work two large wings, ten feet long, made of very thin caoutchoue, covered with feathers; and the wings may be so worked as to produce vertical, perpendicular or horizontal flying. The number of turns given to the handle determines the height which it is desired to go. The handle has to be turned every quarter of a league, to regulate the distance; the operation of turning lasts a minute. Horizontal flying is the most difficult; the wings beat the air like the oars of a boat, or rather as the feet of a swan when he swims. By means of this curious machine, a man can go as fast as a carrier-pigeon from the Hotel de-Ville to the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, in eight minutes, and in half an hour to Versailles. The experiments, which will be made in Paris, will be on a small scale, and the flights of Don Diego will not extend beyond the departments of the Seine; but at a later period he proposes to go to Lyons, Bordeaux, Toulouse, Marseilles, and Tours, and to take the lines of railway. He pretends that he can travel quicker than by rail. The price of each machine will not exceed 1,270f. for men, and 1000f. for women. If the experiment succeeds, Don Diego will take out a patent, and will make the sale of the machines a branch of commerce. Although greatly astonished at this new invention, several members of the Academy have pointed out the inconvenience of bringing it into general use. In point of fact, there will be no security for any one, if, by the aid of such machines, all our usages and customs be overthrown, and if malefactors can fly on the roofs of houses, afterwards get into apartments, and commit all sorts of depredations. It will be very curious to see policemen in France and England pursuing thieves in the air, in order to lock them up on earth. It appears that 1855 promises us all sorts of marvel.

"Nothing but a Printer, Anyhow!"

Such was the sneering remark of an empty-head residing not a thousand miles from the door of our sanctum, in referring to the profession we follow in pride. "Nobody but a printer," in sooth! It makes our blood run rampart through our veins, to hear such expressions fall from the lips of those nursed on republican soil. "Nobody but a printer, anyhow!" Who was Benjamin Franklin? "Nobody but a printer!" Who was William Caxton, one of the fathers of literature? "Nobody but a printer!" Who was Earl Stanhope? "Nobody but a printer!" Who was Governor Armstrong, of Massachusetts? "Nobody but a printer!" Who were Governor Bigler, of Pennsylvania, and Governor Bigler, of California? "Nobody but printers!" George P. Morris, N. P. Willis, Joseph Gales, Charles Richardson, James Harper, Horace Greeley, Bayard Taylor, Robert Sears, and Senators Dix, Cameron, and Niles—who are they? "Nobody but printers, anyhow!" One thing is evident; every person that chooses can't be a printer. Brains are necessary.—American Paper.

Among the numberless new inventions of engines of destruction to which war has given birth, one much talked of at present in the scientific world of Paris is a shell invented by M. Chaslin, a member of the Council General of the Yonne, which he asserts will not only double the force of the powder used, but being a match, will have the inestimable advantage of falling on the spot, desired without giving notice to the enemy by that stream of light in the air which accompanies the present shell. Ignition is brought about by a chemical process, which is said to be so completely under control, that a shell may explode according to the will of the projector either in two minutes or twenty-four hours after its being projected. Thus it would be possible to throw any number of shells successively upon a given point, and to adjust the period of their explosion, so that all should burst at the same moment. The shell would as certainly burst under water as on land, and it is asserted the principle will complete the idea of the boulets asphixiants, which hitherto have not been very effective.

The Emperor of four Boards.

Nicholas, late Emperor, master, owner of upwards of sixty millions of his fellow-creatures, is now simply the Emperor of four boards. A board under him—a board over him—a board at each side of him. In that small compass is contained the late world-wide mischief. The footsteps of that clay image shook the earth—the feet are turned upwards; and the God of Russia is now of no more account than so much Siberian earth. A more solemn, a more awful rebuke to the wicked vanity of human ambition was never vouchsafed by Heaven. A few days ago, and millions trembled at the image they now hold their nose at.

The man is dead, but his wickedness is still vital. We are not of those who would fling roses on his bier; and do homage to that in death, that with all our heart and soul we contended against while living. We exult in the sudden taking away of the moral pestilence, as we would render hearty, grateful thanksgiving for the staying of the plague. Death does not make black white; it consecrates goodness in human memory; it affixes an everlasting brand to the evil doer. The adage, Nil nisi bonum de mortuis—that most respectable and ancient absurdity—would confound all history; would destroy all distinction between good and evil. A tyrant, a blood-shedder, has been no less tyrannous, no less sanguinary, because he ceases to be. His pestilential breath has smitten households; his words have been as destructive shot, as devouring flame. The effects exist and are attested in the woe and agony of living thousands—even though the Imperial mouth is full soon to become a place for worms. We, therefore, with a solemn joy, breathe a thanksgiving for the riddance of the sick man—the really sick man, as Nicholas has proved himself, the Turkish Sultan being still alive and hearty. "We have a sick man on our arms," said Nicholas. We have a dead Emperor in our palace, is the lament of the Imperial household.

How Nicholas died may not be truly known for many years. In the meanwhile, the world is distrustful. It seems to be difficult to imagine a natural death to any ruler of the house of Romanoff. Wherever the world beholds an Emperor of Russia, it sees the inevitable assassin at his shoulder. Paul died with his neck in his own scarf. And it is said that an incautious over-dose of morphine served as the mortal lullaby to Nicholas.

However, we have among us earnest, philanthropic Englishmen, with a reverence for Nicholas. He is affectionately spoken of at Manchester. Mr. Bright laments that such a potentate was ever interfered with. Mr. Bright—in a private party, the public carefully shut out—denounces such meddling, "holding by this principle, that it is not our duty, and that it is not our interest to plunge ourselves headlong into every quarrel that ambition or accident may create in any part of the continent of Europe." Now, we only wish that we had shown a disposition to fling ourselves headlong into the Russian war; then, our very readiness for combat would have stayed bloodshed. But what was the fact? Why, with pilot Aberdeen in the State craft, we were "drifted into the war;" drifted into it without rudder or compass. Surely, we have shown a marvellous amount of placidity. As Fielding says "we have borne our neighbours' misfortunes like Christians. We have suffered Poland to be dismembered—cleft as Solomon, in his assaying wisdom, proposed to cleave in twain the living child; we have quietly seen Hungary deluged with blood, and blasted with despotism; we have folded our hands, and kept a face of calmness, the while Italy has been down-trodden and loaded with chains. What would Mr. Bright require? Does he really wish that John Bull should stand with one cheek ready for a blow—the other cheek being only the readier for another buffet? Is he really of so humble a spirit that he would show his Christianity by suffering himself to be kicked by the boot of the Cossack? If so, we have no objection to the practical operation of his own humility,—he may take kicking to his heart's content and to the "long-continued cheers" of the Manchester admirers; but luckily, to preach such patience to the country is to talk to the winds. John Bull's blood is not drab-colour.—Douglas Jerrold's Newspaper.

POWER OF WOMEN IN TURKEY.—A man meeting a women in the street, turns his head from her, as if it were forbidden to look on her. They seem to detest an impudent woman—to shun and avoid her. Any one, therefore, among the Christians, who may have discussions or altercations with Turks, if he has a women of spirit or a virago for his wife, sets her to revile and browbeat them, and by these means not unfrequently gains his point. The highest degree of shame would attend a Turk who should rashly lift his hand against a woman; all he can venture to do is to treat her with harsh and contemptuous words, or to march off. The sex lay such stress on this privilege, that they are frequently apt to indulge their passion to excess, to be most unreasonable in their claims, and violent and irregular in the pursuit of them. They will importune, tease, and insult a Judge on the bench, or even the Vizier at his divan. The officers of justice do not know how to resent their turbulence: and it is a general observation, that to get rid of them, they often let them gain their cause.—Sir George Larpent's Turkey.

THE DIGNITY OF LABOUR.—Labour, says the Rev. Newman Hall, as a mighty magician, walks forth into a region uninhabited and waste: he looks earnestly on the scene, so quiet in its desolation; then waving his wonder-working wand, those dreary valleys smile with golden harvests—those barren mountain slopes are clothed with foliage—the furnace blazes—the anvil rings—the busy wheels whirl round—the town appears, the mart of commerce, the hall of science, the temple of religion, rear high their lofty fronts—a forest of masts, gay with varied pennons, rises from the harbour—the quays are crowded with commercial spoils, the peaceful spoils which enrich both him who receives and him who yields—representatives of far-off regions make it their resort—science enlists the elements of earth and heaven in its service—art, awaking, clothes its strength with beauty—literature, new born, redoubles and perpetuates its praise—civilization smiles—liberty is glad—humanity rejoices—piety exults, for the voice of industry and gladness is heard on every land; and who, contemplating such results, will deny that there is Dignity in Labour?

Agricultural, &c.

Honor to the Plow.

Though clouds o'ercast our native sky,
And seem to dim the sun,
We will not down in languor lie,
Or deem the day is done.
The rural arts we loved before,
No less we'll cherish now,
And crown the banquet as of yore,
With honor to the plow.

In those fair fields, where peaceful spoil
To faith and hope are given,
We'll seek the prize with honest toil,
And leave the rest to Heaven.
We'll gird us to our work like men,
Who own a holy vow,
And if in joy we meet again,
Give honor to the plow.

Let art array in magic power,
With labor hand in hand,
Go forth, and now, in peril's hour,
Sustain a sinking land.
Let never sloth unnerve the arm,
Or fear the spirit cow;
These words alone should work a charm—
All honor to the plow.

The heath redress, the meadows drain,
The latent swamp explore;
And o'er the long expecting plain
Diffuse the quick'ning store.
Then fearless urge the furrow deep,
Up to the mountain's brow,
And when the rich results you reap,
Give honor to the plow.

So still shall heath and pasture green,
And nodding harvest roam,
And still behind the rustic screen
Shall virtue find a home.
And while their bower the muses build,
Beneath the neighboring bough,
Shall many a grateful verse be filled
With honor to the plow.

Growing Cucumbers.

Seed sown according to previous directions will now have germinated and produced plants ready for turning out in the farms.

Supposing the hot-beds prepared with the best materials on hand, when they have settled, three sticks, six inches around and two feet and a half in length, should be placed crosswise of each sash on the bed, on which place some boards of the same length, which will prevent the heat of the manure from burning the roots. Some rich vegetable mould may be placed on the boards, and the plants set out. A heat from 70 to 75 must be maintained, if possible, and the vines sprinkled morning and evening, in fine weather, with water of the same temperature.

Mould may be added as the plants advance in growth, since they grow more rapidly than when all the mould is applied at once; they must be frequently stopped to induce the growth of fruit-bearing wood.

Air must be admitted on every favorable opportunity.

Mustard and cress may also be sown thickly in pans and pots, and covered with matting, kept constanly wet, by which means the excellent salad will in a few days be ready for use; the seed must not be covered with mould. A succession should be kept up, as it is of easy culture, and an excellent salad.

Lime.

Professor Johnson says, "the effects of lime are greatest when well mixed with the soil and kept near the atmosphere. Its value is greatest upon newly ploughed arable surface soils. Such soils usually contain a greater or less quantity of organic matter, but are nearly destitute of lime. On the other hand, on poor arable lands which have been worn out by repeated liming and cropping, it does no good whatever, as such soils, if they do not already abound in lime, are generally destitute of other kinds of food, organic or inorganic, by which healthy plants are nourished, and they can only be restored to fertility by a judicious admixture of all.

On all lands in which vegetable matter is wanting, lime may even do harm to the immediate crops. A consideration of the circumstances above reverted to are sufficient to induce the entire abandonment of it. Where soil has been impoverished through its unskillful application, or by large admixtures of lime, add marl for a series of material laber. When nature causes have removed the superabundance, and produced an accumulation of those other substances which, when associated with lime, increase the productiveness of the soil, use may be resumed."

The Death of the Czar Foretold Two Years Since.

A letter, that appears in the London Times, over the signature of Dr. Granville, a physician of some eminence, has attracted notice. Dr. Granville had once been Lord Palmerston's medical attendant, and in 1849, resided, in a professional capacity, at St. Petersburg, where he had medical introductions to the imperial court. In the month of July, 1853, he addressed a confidental letter to Lord Palmerston, and which he (Granville) now re-produces in the Times. In the letter, he stated that, having formed a careful prognosis of the state of the health of the Emperor Nicholas, he had come to the conclusion that he would die suddenly in the fifty-ninth year of his age. At an interview with Lord Palmerston, February 23, 1854, Palmerston asked Dr. Granville if he still adhered to his opinion and prediction. Granville replied that, "before July, 1855, when the Emperor would be fifty-nine years of age, the event anticipated would happen. Let but a few reverses overtake him, and his death like that of all his brothers, will be sudden!" It has proved so. Alma, Inkermann, Balaklava, (says the doctor) shook the mighty brain Eupator a completed the stroke, and anticipated the prognosis by only a few weeks.

It might be curious to speculate how far the shrewd Palmerston kept this prophesy in mind in accepting the office of premier, and the task of settling the war.

Louis Napoleon on Canada.

The official acknowledgment from M. Drouyn de L'Huys of the receipt of the money granted to the French Patriotic Fund by the Canadian Legislature has been already published; but the following letter from Louis Napoleon himself to Lord Elgin has not, we believe, seen the light in Canada before:—

"PALACE OF THE TUILLERIES, Feb. 27.

"MY LORD,—I thank you for having communicated to me the address of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of Canada to the Queen of England. It would be difficult for them to associate themselves in a more patriotic or touching manner with the success of our arms in the East, and with the disasters inseparable from this great struggle. Moved like myself, believe me, by the eloquent testimony of so vivid a sympathy, our country will not see without gratitude that in memory of its French origin, the population of Canada has not wished to separate, in its congratulations and in its offerings, those who are so nobly united to a community of danger. I beg of you to be the interpreter to the Legislative Council and to the Legislative Assembly of Canada of my sentiments, as I believe I am of those of France.

"Receive, my lord, the assurance of my high esteem.

"NAPOLEON."

The Blockade of the Danube.

A supplement of the London Gazette of Friday publishes the following official notification of the raising of the blockade of the Danube:—

"Foreign Office, March 19.

"It is hereby notified that the Right Hon. the Earl of Clarendon, K. G., her majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, has received a despatch from Rear-Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons, G. C. B., commanding her majesty's naval forces in the Black Sea, dated Royal Albert, off Sebastopol, 20th of February, 1855, and addressed to the Lords commissioners of the Admiralty, announcing that, in conjunction with Vice-admiral Bruat, commanding the French Squadron in the Black Sea, he had, on and from the 18th of February last, raised the blockade of the Danube, which was established on and from the 1st day of June, 1854, and which was notified in the London Gazette of the 13th of June, 1854, and which has since been duly maintained. It is hereby notified that the cruisers of the allied fleets are, and will remain, stationed off the mouth of the Danube to capture any vessel laden with contraband of war destined for the use of the enemy."

Whilst Lord John Russell was staying here, a Jewish rabbi, Dr. Phillipsohn, in Magdeburg, addressed a memorial to him, thanking him for his efforts in England in the cause of Jewish Emancipation, and begging him at the Peace Conference in Vienna not to allow any distinctions being drawn between the rights enjoyed by the various denominations of Rayahs under the Sultan's rule; the more so, as the carrying out the principle only to its half extent would diminish its value and security even for the Christians. In the answer which Lord John caused to be sent to Dr. Philippsohn, he expressed the firm intention of her Majesty's Government "to persevere in their endeavours to procure for the Sultan's Jewish subjects, equally with the Christians, the advantage of equal rights and impartial administration."—Berlin Correspondent of Times.

Lady John Russell landed on Friday at Calais, on her way to Vienna, to join her husband.

Arrival of the Asia.

HALIFAX, March 30.

The royal mail steamship Asia, Captain Lott, arrived at this port, last night, en route for Boston.

Her dates from Liverpool are to Saturday 17th, one week later than the Atlantic.

The manifesto of the Emperor Alexander to his army is dated St. Petersburg, March 3rd:—"Valiant warriors—faithful defenders of the church, throne and country—it has pleased Almighty God to visit us with the most painful loss. We have lost our common father and benefactor in the midst of his unwearied care for Russian arms. The Emperor Nicholas, Paul Orvitch, my beloved father, has departed to eternity. His last words were, 'I thank the glorious loyal Guards who, in 1825, saved Russia; and also I thank the brave army and fleet. I pray God to maintain the courage and spirit by which they have distinguished themselves under me. So long as this remains, Russian tranquility is secure both within and without. Then war to her enemies. I loved my troops as my own children, and strove as much as I could to improve their condition. If I was not entirely successful in that respect, it was from no want of will, but because I was unable to devise anything better or to do anything more.' May these ever memorable words remain preserved in your hearts, as a proof of his sincere love for you, which I share to the largest extent; and let them be a pledge of your devotion for me and Russia.

(Signed) "ALEXANDER."

POSTSCRIPT.—Present to the Guards the uniform worn by the late Emperor, and direct them to retain on their accoutrements "N," the initial of Nicholas. The manifesto concludes: "May the sacred memory of Nicholas survive in our ranks as a terror to the foe and the glory of Russia.

(Signed,) "ALEXANDER.

According to English accounts, Nicholas advised Alexander to make peace, even at the loss of Russian influence in the Black Sea.

Russian accounts say, Nicholas passed his last hours in the consolations of religion, having bid adieu to all the members of his family individually. He said to the Empress:—"Tell your brother, the King of Prussia, to adhere to Russia, and never forget his father's policy." Nicholas then took leave of Counts Orloff, Dalgorouki and Arlemart, and also of favourite granediers of the household and personal attendants. All except his family retired, and he asked the Empress to repeat the Lord's prayer. At the words "will be done in earth, as in heaven," Nicholas fervently responded, "always, always." Soon afterwards he added, "I hope God will open for me his arms." He then became partially insensible for two hours. At noon he said something about a message to a dear friend, not named, and something of Alexander and the garrison of Sebastopol. A few minutes afterwards he drew a deep sigh, and expired. The body was exposed, face uncovered, in the chapelle Argente until March 16, when it was buried with usual imperial solemnity.

Vienna Conference.

The Congress at Vienna formally met on Thursday, 15th March. There were present one French, two English, two Austrian, and two Turkish representatives. The Russian plenipotentiary was not present. Telegraphic reports say that the discussion of the general basis of the negotiations terminated satisfactorily.

Rumours are current that Austria and England would be content without the demolition of Sebastopol, but that Napoleon absolutely insists on that condition.

VIENNA, Friday night.

At Conference yesterday, the Plenipotentiaries exchanged their powers, and proceedings were entered into for the fourth basis, having been set forth, the representatives of Russia accept them verbally. One of the plenipotentiaries was hereupon deputed to draw up a minute, or proctocol, of this, which is to be signed to-morrow, Saturday—the first thing when the ambassadors meet, and this document will constitute the basis of negociations for peace.

PARIS, Friday night.

The mission of General Weddell has completely failed. Prussia refuses to accede to the treaty with the allies, and will not, therefore, be admitted to participate in the Conference.

Sebastopol.

Allies have resumed firing upon the town.

Letters of 1st March explain the discrepancy between French and Russian accounts of the storming of a redoubt on the night of the 23rd February. Both accounts were correct. The French did storm and capture two Russian redoubts, but finding them not tenable from a murderous fire from the wall batteries, they blew up the the redoubts and retired, with a loss of a 100 killed and 100 wounded.

FEB. 27.—The dead were buried during a truce of one hour.

The following is Menschikoff's last despatch:—"During last night we erected a second redoubt in front of that which is on the left side of our fortifications. It was impossible for the enemy to prevent us."

Nothing of importance has occurred at Eupatoria.

MARCH 2nd.—Balaklava advices report sickness decreasing, weather clear and frosty.

Three miles of railroad is now in operation

Allies' rear is generally strengthened.

Burgoyne, Chief of Engineers, has left, and is succeeded by General Jones, who recommended, contrary to Napier's advice, an attack on Cronstadt.

MARCH 3rd.—Russians are fortifying in a formidable manner the Inkermann valley, and are erecting a mortar battery at Kamara to threaten Balaklava, and have sunk two more ships in Sebastopol harbour.

MARCH 7th.—Official French despatch:—"Information of the death of Nicholas just received. Yesterday we threw rockets on Kamiesch, which set the town on fire. Two Russian officers have deserted to the English. Our siege works are progressing with the greatest activity.

(Signed) "BRUAT, Vice-Admiral."

MARCH 8th.—Nothing important

The reported battle in which Osten Sacken was said to have been wounded is false.

The Austrian Government had notified the French and English that the mission of Archduke William to St. Petersburg is an act of sympathy merely, and has no political object.

Austria has addressed another circular to the Germanic federal government, dated 8th March, informing them that an Austrian commissioner will present a new proposition towards the effectual mobilization of the Germanic contingent.

Russia by decree, likewise dated March 8th, prohibits exportation of contraband of war. Circular insists on the necessity of being prepared for all eventualities, and mentions that Emperor Alexander has authorized Gortschakoff to negotiate for peace on the basis sanctioned by the late Emperor.

Prussia also issued a circular, dated March 8th, to its diplomatic Consular agents, stating there is reason to believe that the negotiations now in progress will terminate in peace. Alexander is said to have written to the King of Prussia, soliciting advice. The King of Prussia has notified England and France of Nicholas's death; and the Emperor of Austria has written to Napoleon that he thinks negotiations will lead to peace.

Menschikoff has gone to Moscow.

The Roebuck committee was still prosecuting its enquiries into the conduct of the war.

A manifesto by the new Emperor of Russia to his army is interpreted as a warlike demonstration.

The two grand Dukes are on their way to St. Petersburg from the Crimea; it is not true that Michael is killed. Osten Sacken now commands within Sebastopol Danube.

ODESSA.—No news of importance.—Count Lamersky is organizing at Schumla a second regiment of Turkish Cossacks, in which Poles will be enrolled.

Disturbance have occurred in Syria. One thousand five hundred Turkish troops have gone to Beyrout.

The Dawn Institute.

Mr. J. C. Brown, so well and favourably known to Colored Canadians, for fidelity to their interests, and a Trustee of the above called place, lectured in the 2nd Wesleyan Chapel in this city, on Monday evening last, to a large audience.

Mr. Brown has been visiting the several districts in which our people reside, and has aroused them to a sense of their duty touching the Dawn, and from indications at the meeting and subsequent occurrences, it is possible that Toronto, too, may make a demonstration. The persons present on the occasion, were enlightened, and instructed respecting Dawn, and the doings for and against it, more than ever before, as the rigid questioning, and cross-questioning, borne by the speaker, with the gratest ease, and the hearty vote of thanks given at the termination evinced.

The rise and progress of the Dawn, with the management, mismanagement—the deeds of good men and doings that were anything but creditable, whether the doers claimed to be good men or not, were held up to the amusement or the disgust of a wronged people, but with a degree of forbearance as to names, and dignity of manner, that invited guests or interested parties who have hitherto trumpeted the other view of Dawn, might imitate with advantage. A call for names was made by some present, but the better way was pointed out, and the time-worn, battered, sorely tried servant of his people, took leave at a late hour, and the meeting adjourned to next Monday evening, the 9th inst., to meet at the 1st Baptist Church, after having selected three out of the committee of five to be finally appointed. In giving details of Dawn, some of the points dwelt upon were the original design of a Manual Labor School for the fugatives and other colored people in Canada—the purchase of lands for the same—the 80 acres given to Mr. Josiah Henson for begging services—the 20 acres sold Rev Hiram Wilson—the Boston gift of several thousand dollars towards the saw-mill to prevent begging so much, and the modest per centage (25 per cent) paid the agent for bringing the Boston money home—then the saw-mill contract, or no contract, developing a species of manouvering not equalled at Sebastopol as yet so far as we know. The manner by which possession was taken—the prosperous Institution, now and for a long period defunct—the debts contracted—creditors finally compounded with, and what were the actions of a committee appointed at one time, not to place Dawn out of the reach of the people—not to suffer destruction to stalk abroad, but to give force to Mr. Wilson's reports of the school and its management when it existed.

Mr. Brown dwelt for some time upon the steady refusal to have the accounts audited, as required upon the Declaration of Trust, which, by-the-way, is about to be superceded by a new instrument of the same name—spoke of Mr. Josiah Henson's visit to England, and of his return in company with John Scoble, the party who now lives thereon, and who assumes to direct affairs, with the acts of petty tyranny, confusion, bickerings, &c., that charicterised his advent. The preparatory remedies to be applied at once should wily manoeuvres not prevent them, from carrying out on the 29th of August of this year, the original design of donors to the Dawn, were then referred to. By the regulation for its management, the colored people of the several localities in which they may be living, are empowered to call public meetings, and to appoint delegates—two three or more in number, to represent them at the August convention of this year, should it be held, at which time, the former students if there be any alive, and the life members, those who have paid £5 to the Dawn, will have power to select from among the delegates sent, six Trustees, besides filling vacancies occasioned by the resignation or death of former Trustees.

It will here be seen that the people are called upon to take steps in an important matter, and if it be not too late, they should act with the energy and fearlessness becoming a people, with their growing reputation for honesty and integrity of purpose.

A lecture on the operation of the Maine Law was delivered on Tuesday evening last, as announced by Dr. Lewis from the States. The necessity of a prohibitory law is fast gaining adherents, and temperance men are unsparing in their exertions to have its workings laid before the people, as will be gathered from the many lectures and publications by them, including a recent work now for sale in this city, by Mr. URE, and which is said to be excellent in style and replete with facts in its favor; but the lecture on Tuesday will lend but little to propel the movement, we fear. The performance though capital, in design, was weak in execution and effect—very weak indeed; yet, as an illustration of Yankee break-a-head-a-tiveness, right or wrong, it was true to the letter.

Dr. Lewis may know how to treat of Homepathy, but outside of "Middletown, in Connecticut," he made, to use his own elegant expression, rather a "pickle" of the Maine Law operations. Miss Clark, of New York, who is said to be equal to the great subject, will lecture in the same Hall (St. Lawrence) this evening.

In consequence of yesterday being Good Friday, the paper has been somewhat delayed.

Emigration.

No. V.

(CONCLUDED.)

The darkest hour is just before the break of day. I see clouds before me and around me, but everything portends the rise of a glorious morn, when the master shall lie down with the slave,—when Liberty, Fraternity, Equality, will ring in all the land. Hail, happy eve! Now, the ranting of slaveholders—now the passage of the Fugitive Slave Bill—now the repeal of the Missouri compromise—now the servility of the American Cabinet and Senate,—is no evidence, gentle render, that the anti-slavery cause is not progressing in this country. You might as well go to the edicts of Napoleon the Second, or the no less despotic measures of the Czar of Russia to understand the state of liberal sentiment on the Continent, as to read a "South side view" of the peculiar institution, to learn the character and prospects of the abolition movement in the United States. Let us submit a fact in support of our opinion.

The Fugitive Bill was passed under peculiar considerations. Quite a number of slaves had run off and taken shelter in the Free States. There was a fort of them in the town of ———, Massachusetts; another stronghold in ———, N. Y.; and still another in ———, Pennsylvania. It was almost impossible to capture one in———, Ohio; and quite impossible in that young Athens of America, ———, Illinois. The free were in direct antagonism to the slave States on this question, and whenever a slave crossed the line, he found a goodly number of friends to help him on his way. The South grew indignant, and demanded the passage of a more effective law for the rendition of fugitives. Remember, we have thirty-one States. Fifteen of that number are slaveholding, and inasmuch as each State under the federal compact is entitled to two senators, the non-slaveholding States have only a majority of two in the Senate. It was an easy matter with a thousand and one offices at the disposal of the Government at Washington to buy up a handful of northern traitors. Hence, Mr. Webster, who was fishing for the Presidency, and Mr. Filmore, who desired re-election to that office, bartered away their souls to the South for a prospective mess of pottage; and as a proof of their fidelity, pushed through the Senate and House of Representatives the bloody act of 1850. Now mark the results. Every free and one slaveholding State, Missouri, have repudiated in part its provisions.

The law requires that a person claimed as a slave shall be given up on ex parte testimony—allows the commissioner ten pieces of silver,—the price for betraying our Saviour,—for every conviction; sets aside the writ of habeas corpus, which has been held sacred, in all free governments, from the restoration of Charles the Second to the present hour. Now, if you claim a man as a slave, he has the privilege of proving his right to his freedom; if you bring him before a commissioner, he has a right to demand a trial before a judge of the Supreme Bench.

Besides, it has produced a deep-rooted feeling to the institution of slavery, and revealed the wicked purposes of the slavery propagandists. And now, in a majority of our own Northern cities, a runaway cannot be taken without the aid of a strong police or military force. It required, in Boston, the United States' troops to remand Anthony Burns, and cost the Government the snug sum of forty thousand dollars. It has also caused a host of slaves, who, otherwise, would have lurked in the States, to seek protection on the hospitable shores of British America. Upon the whole, I regard the Fugitive Law as a decided blessing, and I wish we had one for every day in the year.

But it should be borne in mind that the principle or main object of that law is not new. Emigration leaders would have you believe that it was born but yesterday. The act of 1793, for the rendition of slaves, was in full course of action when superceded by the bill of 1850. The former differed only from the latter act in certain details, and these, as I have shown, have been ignored by the people. They have treated in like manner the repeal of the compromise of 1820; and nearly every man who voted for it has been permitted to remain at home. It is computed by the Cincinnati Daily Enquirer, a staunch bunker sheet, a supporter of the Polk and Pierce dynasties, that the incoming House will not contain, all told, twenty Nebraska-Kansas men, from the States north of Mason and Dixon's Line.

Never, I say, since the organization of the Government, was the abolition question so well and so numerously represented in Congress as it is now. In 1836, John Quincy Adams presented a petition for the dissolution of the Union. He was met on every hand with the cry of treason, and impeached in his seat by Tom Marshall, of Kentucky. Mr. Adams—the Lord Brougham of the House—grappled his antagonist, as he would a child, told him to go home and study; and that he had forgotten more law than he ever knew. The old "man eloquent" was triumphantly sustained. But he had to contend alone. We have now two or more abolition representatives from every free State.

It is a fact worthy of note, that the first anti-slavery publication ever issued in North America was a tract of Ralph Standiford, in 1729; we now have hundreds of such tracts scattered all over the country. The first society for the express purpose of promoting emancipation was organized in Pennslyvania by the celebrated Dr. Franklin, in 1787; its influence was felt in the unanimous declaration of the American people, signed in 1774, that they would not "engage in the slave trade themselves, nor lease their vessels to others for that purpose": we now have a host of such societies in the United States.

In 1822 or 1823, Benjamin Lundy started a periodical, styled the "Genius of Universal Emancipation." To my noble Lundy belongs the honor of editing the first journal in America, devoted mainly to the extinction of slavery; we now have a hundred newspapers working exclusively for "black manity," and no less than two hundred more working for both black and white manity. It is in the memory of men now living, when there was not an academical or a medical school in the United States, where a black man could be admitted on terms of equality: at present, he can be admitted into one or more such schools in every free State of the Union. And so great has been the desire for anti-slavery light, the friends found it necessary to have a course of anti-slavery lectures during the past winter. Hence, we have been delighted with Chase and Hale, and Sumner, and Giddings, and Garrison, and Clay, and Frederick Douglass, incomparably the greatest orator of them all.

In the earlier days of Wm. Lloyd Garrison, the question was frequently asked, "Are you an abolitionist?" The usual form of denial was, "Do you take me for an abolitionist?" Now-a-days, men are proud of the abolition name. Besides this, all the great orators belong to the North and not to the South. Among the list are the names of Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Thomas Buchanan, Reid, and Pierpont.

The South knows how to make bales of cotton; but she does not know how to make books; and while she is scheming for the extension of her power, the North is flooding the country with such books as Uncle Tom, Ida May, and the White Slave. Here I might drop the curtain, for if our literature, nay, our philosophy, is in opposition to slavery, it is easy to foresee the downfall of that abominable tyranny. And yet our emigration neighbors, the sages, or the Don Quichottes, I know not which of the race, say that things are getting worse and worse in the States.

I will bring this series of papers to a close, by briefly recapitulating the points in the course of the argument. First, that there is no prejudice in the States against color, but condition. That if it be against the color, that is natural for a Caucasian to hate a Negro, and the contrary, where and when they meet, mutual repellency must follow; and since they have met, and it has not taken place, I am authorzed in saying that no such a state of nature exists.

You reply, that if it be against condition, "why do not our higher classes take position with their own classes of whites? Surely, as they are now elevated in society, they should sit at the first table, take the best seats in the churches, and the boxes in the theatres." Not necessarily so. All men are born free and equal; but it does not follow that all are equal in a state of society. The law regulating men socially depends not on a priori but a secondary cause, as I shall show in the sequel. And now, since you are in the humour of asking questions, allow me to propound one or two to you. Why do not the colored barbers [generally] shave colored men in their shops? Why do not colored men admit on terms of equality, those of their own complexion in their eating houses in the city of ———?

I guess you have run your head against a ram's horn, and if you have no objection, I will ease the concussion. Here is the answer: Because it is not to their interest; neither is it to the interest of the whites. And why not to their interest? Because we have not advanced sufficiently to give these a vital support, and therefore the Yankee, in spite of law or Gospel, will follow the eternal dollar. Secondly, that we can rise to the most honourable stations in social life;—such as lawyers, doctors, divines, artists, &c. Thirdly, that we have a large scope here for development. If we wish to be farmers, we can purchase government lands cheap, and sell at good prices all we can raise. If we desire to be moralists, or savans, the churches and schools are opened, where we can learn how to be as holy as the divine Socrates, or as wise as the immortal Plato. Fourthly, that every native, bond or free, is a citizen; that we have citizens, however, as recognized by the States, that a citizen of a State is a citizen of the United States. Fifthly, that we have no desire to separate ourselves from the whites, in seeking our rights, but to become a part and parcel of the great American family. Sixthly, that it is not to our interest to emigrate to South America, because of the climate, language, and habits of the inhabitants of that country. That the British West Indies offer no better inducement, for, aside from the seasons, the dominant classes are among the most haughty aristocrats in the world. That Africa is absolutely worse; the climate and air are as much opposed to the development of American manhood as light to darkness, as truth to error. That the British Provinces will do very well; but that the same combination of causes necessary to elevate us there, to wit: numbers, wealth, and intelligence, will elevate us here. That the public sentiment of the country is rapidly advancing in our favour; that ere long the sun will enjoy his meridian glory. And finally, that we never will emigrate en masse from the States.

And now, when the vessel is well nigh ready to bear us safely into port, shall we desert our country, desert the graves of our fathers, our mothers, brothers and sisters. Shall we leave, to clank their chains on the cotton swamps of the South, four millions of slaves. I trow not. I trust, however, in this the noon of our regeneration, that we may prove to the world that we are not poltroons and cowards, and unfit for the condition of freemen.

I am in favor of individual enterprise. If a person can do better in one city than in another, let him, if he choose, remove there; if better in one country than another, let him emigrate there. We wish fetters on neither the body nor the soul, but have both as free as the air. But we desire no conventions—no fussy, wordy resolves, no interlopers among us with honeyed words upon their tongues, in favour of expatriation—but we wish all to be fully persuaded in their own minds, to use the words of St. Paul. Hope our friends are satisfied with this expose.

Report and Circular of the True Band Society of Amherstburg, C. W.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM,—Please publish the following Report and Circular, in behalf of the True Band Society of Amherstburg, C. W., and vicinity, for the benefit of the Colored people in Canada, and to invigorate the panting Fugitive, who is now fleeing before the baying bloodhounds of the slaveholder, and the more cruel minions and slave-catchers of the "Fugitive Slave Bill:"—

We, the colored people of Amherstburg, have the most of us fled from American Slavery,—"the vilest that ever saw the light,"—where we have been robbed of all our earnings, crushed in our intellects, denied education, under the debauch system of Slavery; where we have been chattels and goods in the hands of our masters, and resistance to white men is made crime by the slave law; where virtue is necessarily (under such laws) crushed in the dust, and the slave is a victim to the lust and avarice of the oppressor. But, through the good Providence of God, and by means of friends, the North Star, and underground railroad, we have sought for freedom and found it in Canada, under Her Majesty; and when many of us arrived here, we were literally naked, hungry, and penniless; the country being new, and but little cleared up, we have necessarily been very poor. Appeals have been made to our friends, the Abolitionists, in the States, and we have, in common with other fugitives, received some temporary relief through their benevolence, for which we are thankful.

But, while we have received such relief, the goodness of our friends has been imposed upon; and a system of "begging" has been got up, and agents have been going out through the States, constantly telling of our suffering and poverty, and asserting that we cannot sustain ourselves, after so many years of freedom: at the same time, those agents are living upon the spoils of beggary, neglecting to work with their hands—one dollar per day being a common price allowed to begging agents.

Now, brethren, this begging brings us no permanent good; but degrades us in the eyes of the world. And the people of the United States, and the slaveholders, have cause to say, and in fact do say, "the slaves can't take care of themselves. The blacks were made for slaves, and freedom is a curse to them." We, the True Band of Amherstburg, repudiate the whole system of begging in behalf of the fugitives in Canada; and by an unanimous vote, in our last meeting, we passed a solemn resolution to that effect. The resolution passed was:—

"Under God we can take care of ourselves."

Our True Band Society was formed and organized the 13th day of Nov., (A. D.,) 1854, for the following purpose:—First, to form a Union among ourselves. Second, for our intellectual improvement. Third, to increase our benevolent feelings—(the most ennobling principle of the human mind)—and to prove that truth of Scripture, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Fourth, to raise funds to assist the fugitive on his way to Canada; and also, after getting here, those who have not the means to support themselves until they can get employment. Fifth, to get them into good business as soon as possible, and to encourage them to improve their talents, to live by the sweat of their own brows, and make themselves useful men and women amongst us. Sixth, to encourage all to escape the "yoke of bondage" for freedom; and those in the Northern States exposed to the Fugitive Slave Law, to make sure their liberty.

We have a Constitution and By-laws, by which we are governed. Our officers are:—a President, Vice President, Recording and Corresponding Secretary, a Treasurer, two Auditors, and a Board of Managers, consisting of five. The Society has been in operation four and a half months, and has paid out 13s. 9d. ($2 75c.) Cash in the Treasury, £5 4s. 1½d. ($22 85c.)

The terms of membership are,—for males, 12½ cents; females, 6¼ cents.

We meet on the first Tuesday evening in each month, in the Baptist Church, without regard to sect.

By order, and in behalf of the Society.

MAJOR STEPHENS, President.
FOUNTAIN BUSH, Vice-President.

Amherstburg, March 13, 1855.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Valedictory Address.

At a meeting called by the 'Young Men's Excelsior Literary Association,' in the Sayer Street Chapel, for the purpose of taking the farewell leave of the President, and receiving his resignation, prior to his leaving the City, the house was called to order.

On motion of Mr. L. G. Simpson, the Rev. J. Davis was called to the chair.

After prayer, by the Rev. J. Davis, we were favoured with an eloquent and suitable Address from the Rev. J. B. Smith.

On motion of Mr. John Custalo—

Resolved—That we, as members of the Excelsior Literary Association, tender our heartfelt gratitude to our late President, for the efficient manner in which he has conducted our meetings.

Carried unanimously.

After which, a presentment was made by Mr. S. C. Simpson, Vice-President of the Society, consisting of a handsome Pen and Pencil Case, together with a Portfolio and Inkstand; a donation in behalf of the Society, by Mr. John Hunter, a member, accompanied by the following Address:—

To the President of the Excel'r Liter'y Association:

SIR,—In behalf of the Excelsior Literary Association, having heard with much regret that you are about to leave the City of Toronto for a broader field of labour, cordially unite in acknowledging our gratitude for your kindness in assisting us to organize our Association; and also, for the able and efficient manner in which you have presided over the same. We alike acknowledge our obligations to you for the laborious efforts and exertions which you have made for our mental and intellectual improvement. Nothing, we can assure you, Sir, could reconcile us to your departure, but the earnest hope that your removal may tend to the further advantage of that oppressed people with whom you feel yourself to be identified, and among whom your lot may be cast. Hoping that success may ever attend you in your endeavours and devoted labour to the cause of Christ and suffering humanity, accept, Sir, our heartfelt desire for the health and prosperity of yourself and family, and we sincerely trust that Providence may yet so order it that your lot may again speedily be cast in our midst. And in further acknowledgment of our attachment to you, and in order that a momento of the same be given, we present you with a Pencil Case, Pen, Portfolio, and Inkstand.

Accept these, we pray thee, not for their intrinsic value, but as a memorial of the valuable services that you have rendered us since your short stay in our City; and, Sir, so long as you are able to handle this Pen, may it be in the cause of your oppressed people; and may every word that you write with it be a death blow to Tyrants, and an encouragement to your people! And, when monster death shall have taken hold of you with his iron grasp, may you be resigned to your fate, and pass gently into your immortality, and enjoy in the next the fruits of your untiring labour in this world!

In reply, Mr. Smith said:—

GENTLEMEN—Members of the Excelsior Literary Association,—It affords me great pleasure to accept from you, through your Vice-President, Mr. Simpson, this beautiful gift, which you have so kindly presented to me. I appreciate it not only on account of its virtue and use, but the more so, because I regard it not only as a token of your respect for me, personally, but as a testimony of your high appreciation of the humble services I may have been enabled to render to you, and my people generally. I can assure you, that under these considerations, I feel myself bound to tender to you, Gentlemen, my most grateful acknowledgments. This Pen, &c., shall not only be employed, in writing out the history of my own humble life, but I shall ever be happy in wielding it to the very best of my ability for the general interest and welfare of our down-trodden and oppressed people.

After which, the following Resolutions were proposed by the Rev. R. M. Johnson, and unanimously adopted:—

WHEREAS the Rev. J. B. Smith is called away from this City to the New England States, by the urgency of a more useful field of labour:

Resolved—That the ability and earnestness with which Mr. Smith has presided over the Excelsior Literary Association, has enlisted on his behalf the esteem of both visitors and members of the Society, and has inspired an offering, although of comparatively trivial cost, yet it is the farewell tribute of the Young Men who composed the Excelsior Literary Association of the City of Toronto, and in whose warm and grateful hearts the name of John B. Smith must ever find a welcome place.

Resolved—That we do most fully sympathize with Excelsior Literary Association in their great loss, and highly appreciate the feeling that promoted the gift of that beautiful little token of their regard.

Resolved—That while we are not inclined to murmur at the equitable distinction of Providence, we sincerely regret the removal of one from our midst who knows so well our rights, and how to defend them.

Resolved—That J. B. Smith shall have our prayers, for a long and useful life on earth, especially devoted to the redemption of his brethren! and in the end, an abundant entrance into the mansion prepared for those who are faithful unto death.

BILL.

An Act to make certain Alterations in the Deed of Trust under which the First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church in Toronto is held.

Read, first time, Friday 9th March, 1855.
Second Reading, Monday, 19th March, 1855.

WHEREAS the members of the First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church in the City of Toronto, have, by their petition to the Legislature, represented, that by reason of the provisions of the Trust Deed under which the land is held for the use of the said Church, and the place of worship erected thereon,—the mode of appointing Trustees pointed out and regulated by the said Trust Deed is contrary to the recognised government and discipline of the said Church, and have prayed for relief in the premises, by being permitted to elect the said Trustees annually from among themselves, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the said petition: Be it therefore enacted, &c., as follows:—

I. That notwithstanding anything in the said Trust Deed contained, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said first Colored Calvinist Baptist Church in Toronto aforesaid, at any meeting of the members of the said Church, to be by the deacons thereof called, notice of such meeting, being given from the pulpit immediately before the sermon on the Sunday next preceding the day of such meeting, at which meeting (two-thirds of the whole number of members being present) all the members of the said Church shall be entitled to vote, to appoint from among the male members thereof, such and so many Trustees, not being more than seven nor less than three, who, and their successors in office to be appointed as hereinbefore mentioned, shall be known by the corporate name of "The Trustees of the First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church of Toronto," and shall be a corporate body, and shall have all the corporate powers and privileges conferred upon and vested in Trustees appointed for the purpose of taking and holding land for the site of a Church, Meeting-house or Chapel, by virtue of an Act of the late Province of Upper Canada, made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of His late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled, An Act for the relief of the Religious Societies therein mentioned."

II. Until Trustees shall be appointed under this Act, the Trustees mentioned in the said Trust Deed, or their successors, shall remain in office as such Trustees; and the Trustees to be appointed under and by virtue of this Act, shall hold office for one year and no longer, unless the members of the First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church aforesaid shall not, at or immediately before the expiration of the term of office of the said Trustees, appoint their successors as aforesaid, in which case the Trustees then in office, shall hold office until their successors shall be appointed as heretofore mentioned: and in the case of the death of one or more of the said Trustees during their term of office, it shall and may be lawful to and for the members of the said First Colored Calvinist Baptist Church, immediately to fill up the vacancy or vacancies occasioned by such death or deaths, if it shall be deemed expedient so to do, upon the same notice and in the same manner as is provided herein, for the appointment and election of Trustees; Provided always, that nothing herein contained, shall prevent the said Trustees, or any of them, at any such annual or other election, from being re-elected Trustees as aforesaid.

III. Nothing in the said Trust Deed, or in this Act contained, shall give the said Trustees, in their corporate capacity, any control or power whatsoever, over the finances or income of the said Church; but such control shall be vested in those parties to whom, by the constitution and government of the said Church, the control thereof properly belongs.

IV. This Act shall be deemed a Public Act.

Arrival of the "Baltic."

NEW YORK, April 6, 1855.

The steamship Baltic has arrived with Liverpool dates to the 24th ult.

Nothing important from Sebastopol.

The Vienna conference unanimously agreed upon the first point, placing the Principalities under the five powers.

Second Despatch—The Baltic left Liverpool on the afternoon of the 24th, and reached her dock a little before 10 o'clock.

The Czar Alexander had made several speeches, mild to the diplomatic body, but strong to the army. On the whole, his language was interpreted in a pacific sense.

The first of the four points, which had been unanimously agreed to at the Vienna conference read as follows:—"Abolition of the exclusive protectorate of Russia in Moldavia and Wallachia," the privileges accorded to those provinces by the Sultan being placed under the guarantee of the Five Powers.

The latest despatch from Vienna, dated Friday evening, was that the conferences are progressing favourably. The second point was either settled to-day or will be to-morrow.

It must be repeated that the question of peace or war is not decided until the third point is settled.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times telegraphs under date of Friday evening, that the news from Vienna appears to be favourable to peace, and at Paris people believe that the Conference will be attended with a happy result.

Count Nesselrode, it is believed, will proceed to Vienna when the negociations become critical.

The new Czar gave strong evidence of abiding by the plans traced out by his father, and that he would make no concessions.

Rumours were current that a new basis of arrangement, including the freedom of the Black Sea, opening of the Danube and the erection of Turkish forts in Asia.

Constantinople advices state that the Porte has determined to maintain undiminished sovereignty of the Dardanelles, and protests against the Christians of the empire being placed under any foreign protection. The Porte also desires the participation of Prussia in the conference.

Ali Pacha, Minister of Foreign Affairs, had been summoned to Vienna.

The official reports of the storming of Malakoff redoubt, on the night of the 2nd of February, by the French, are published, and exhibit one of the most gallant achievements of the campaign.

Gen. Osten Sacken telegraphs to St. Petersburgh that "On the night of the 10th we erected a new redoubt about 300 yards in front of the Korniloff Bastion; out-works are carried on with success."

Nothing of importance before Eupatoria.

Gen. Burgoyne remains in the Crimea, at the request of Lord Raglan. The health of the allied troops was satisfactory. The English position was well fortified.

The Russians had received reinforcements.

At an allied council of war, held on the 4th, it was resolved to recommence active operations.

Lord Raglan's latest despatch is dated March 8th, and says the weather is fine and dry. The sick were deriving benefit from the change.

Gen. Pennefather had rejoined his division.

A new British battery of 31 guns had caused 2 small Russian steamers to leave their moorings, and that the Russians were receiving large reinforcements, provisions, and munitions of war.

Omar Pacha's force on the 9th March, was 35,000, and was continually being reinforced.

Nicholas's death was announced in Sebastopol on the 6th March.

An Anglo-French squadron of 25 steamers were on their way to Genoa, to embark Sardinian troops for the Crimea.

Odessa advices of the 14th state that Prince Menschikoff died of fever, at Simpheropol. Doubtful.

Constantinople letters of the 12th of March, mention that continued shocks of earthquakes were felt. Mount Olympus smoked like a volcano.

The Russians had sunk 3 or more ships of war in the harbour of Sebastopol.

The French hospital at Constantinople had been burned to the ground, 96 persons perished.

The palace Beglerbeg had been replenished and put in order for the Emperor Napoleon.

The Pope had sent an embassy of condolence and friendship to Alexander.

It was reported that Gortschakoff had been ordered from St. Petersburgh, to take Eupatoria at any price, and was preparing to obey.

Russian preparations indicate an eventual evacuation of Bessarabia without a contest.

The Grand Duke Constantine is given, in his quality of Grand Admiral, the direction of the fleet and ministry of marine.

The first instalment of the Baltic fleet sailed from Spithead for Keil on the 20th March.

The Invalide Russe reports the capture of the Turkish camp at Leghoi, Asia.

The 21st of March was observed as a national fast throughout Great Britain.

In the House of Lords, Lords Lyndhurst and Clarendon had spoken severely against the conduct of Prussia.

The proceedings of the Roebuck Committee were drawing to a close.

Louis Napoleon had reviewed the Imperial Guards, and made a short patriotic speech.

The new Belgian ministry had been formed, but only held office for a day. The crisis, therefore, continues.

The Legislative Assembly of Denmark had unanimously passed an impeachment of the ex-ministers.

The French attempt to storm Shanghai had proved a failure.

Nothing of importance from Canton.

The Baltic has seventy-six passengers: among them is Bishop Timon.

Search after a Slave Girl—A Fugitive aided by a Merchant.

It is reported that a gentleman who came down the river on Thursday, with a boat-load of salt, had a slave, in whom he placed the utmost confidence, and when the gentleman stopped at the Spencer House, he took with him from the boat this colored man to attend on him, but the following night the negro man was missing; and it has since been ascertained that he was placed on the underground railroad, and taken rapidly northward.

A gentleman from Natchez, Miss., whose name is said to be Johnson, arrived here on Wednesday, and brought with him an interesting dark mulatto girl, about ten years of age, who was held as a slave.

It was rumored about town yesterday morning, that the Mississippian and this girl were stopping at the Walnut-Street House, and some abolitionists sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and placed it in the hands of one of the deputy sheriffs, who went down to the Walnut-Street House, and looked round, but could not find the girl, and left.

Soon afterwards it was represented that that the girl was in the house, but was removed from one room and secreted in another. Again the deputy sheriff went down, but could not find the girl. Last night a vigorous watch was kept on the premises, but we have not learned that anything strange turned up.

The case of a slave who came through from Mississippi by land, and here was waited on by a merchant, who once took an active part in favor of suppressing abolition agitation, and who is now largely interested in southern trade, is the fourth slave 'item' that has been reported to us very recently. In this latter case, the merchant received a letter from one of his correspondents in the South, stating the escape of the slave, and his probable course northward, and also describing him very minutely, so that he might be caught. On the very next day, the negro who, from very long travel, was half famished, applied at the merchant's house, for something to eat, and was at once recognised as the runaway.

He was fed, and charged with being a fugitive. He acknowledged it, but pleaded ill-usage, and begged so hard not to be sent back, that the merchant put him away for safe-keeping, while he went to his counting-room to think about the matter. His previous convictions, his opinions of his constitutional obligations and his interests, all led him to send the negro back, but his feelings finally overcame him, and revealing the case to some of the conductors on the underground railroad, he handed the negro over to them, at the same time presenting him with ten dollars to help him along.

AN ATTEMPT TO DETAIN SIXTEEN SLAVES ON A WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.—The steamer Falls City, Capt. Samson, arrived here about nine o'clock on Saturday night, from Wheeling, en route for St. Louis, having on board sixteen slaves in custody of their owner. During the whole of yesterday, gangs of negroes, interspersed with a few whites, were seen in groups about the gangway. Once or twice a portion of them ventured on the boat, but were promptly driven off, and during the day a party were endeavoring to force open a state-room, in which were a couple of female slave children. From the vigilance of the officers and crew, no other attempts were made during the day, but about 9 o'clock last evening, Mr. H. B. Blackwell, of unenviable notoriety, accompanied with one of the deputy sheriffs, came on board, armed with a writ of habeas corpus, and demanded the slaves. But their owner had foreseen this issue, and at dark had very quietly conveyed them in a yawl to the Kentucky shore. They will remain in Covington until the Falls City is ready to leave, when she will go over and take them on board.—Cincinnati Commercial.

☞ The Rev. John F. Cook, a colored minister of this city, founder and pastor of the 15th street Presbyterian Church, died at his residence a few days since. He was held in high esteem by all classes, and his death is a severe loss to the colored people, to whose best interests he was devoted.—National Era.

☞ The receipts of the Niagara Suspension Bridge the last year amounted to $40,000, the new large structure just completed cost about $500,000. The old structure was used as a platform in building the new one and has been removed. There are three tracks upon the bridge. At the same time only one train can occupy them at once, as they are all in the compass of a single six feet track. It is this track way, and this alone that is leased to the Canada road for 45,000 a year, which they underlet to the N. Y. Central and such other roads as may desire to use it. All the rest of the Bridge, the carriage way and the foot ways that are beside the track way are reserved by the Bridge, Company. These last will give an income of many thousand dollars above the $45,000 lease. The loads that have passed over the bridge thus far have been comparatively light, but for a long time past a weight of some 250 or 300 tons of stone has been laying upon the Bridge as a sort of make weight. There will be a formal celebration of the opening of the Bridge, about the first of May, to which "all the world" will gather.

FIRES.

About eight o'clock yesterday morning, a fire broke out in the carpentering shop of Mr. Norton, rear of Mr. Harcourt's dry goods establishment, King Street, and, notwithstanding the speedy arrival of the fire Companies, the building was burned to the ground. A quantity of tools and unfinished work were destroyed. The origin of the fire has not been clearly ascertained. At ten o'clock the city bells again tolled the alarm and it was ascertained that another carpentering shop on Edward Street, the property of Mr. J. Duggan, had taken fire, in consequence of a defect in a stove pipe. Owing to the activity of the neighbours, a considerable quantity of lumber was saved but the shop was burned. Mr. Duggan's loss is estimated at £300—insured for £200. Several window-sashes, doors, &c., were also consumed—Mrs. Sovereign and Mr. St. Germain being the principal losers in these articles.—Globe, April 4th.

NEWBURY WARDSVILLE STATION.—This new and flourishing village, which only dates its commencement about fifteen months ago, bids fair to become a large place. Situated in the heart of a most excellent and large agricultural district, we see nothing to prevent it. There are now seven stores, four inns, two saw-mills, and one flour mill, also preparations for building a church. We were glad to find our old friend Geo. J. Smith, who kept for some years the stage house at Eckfrid, has located there and is keeping the Railroad Hotel; also Mr. Edmond Snell, from Mosa. A large quantity of wheat has this winter been purchased and shipped over the Great Western Railway, and the station-master, Mr. McFarline, told us that the traffic at that station was daily increasing.—Windsor Herald.

It appears that the United States Secretary of the Treasury is inclined to put a construction on the Reciprocity Treaty different from what is generally supposed. In a circular which that functionary has issued to the United States Custom House Officers, he excludes boards, planks, lath and shingles, from the free list, considering them manufactured wood. The western and north-western States, will not be satisfied with such a construction, differing so much from the true intent of the treaty. It is a petty-fogging quibble, unworthy of a respectable government, and cannot be permitted. The Buffalo Express in disapproving of it says: The government is determined that the north-west shall have neither commerce nor the means of building habitations.—Colonist.

An attempt is being made in the Legislature to abolish the death penalty. We agree with the Montreal Witness in the hope that it will be unsuccessful. The crime of murder is so fearfully common, that the penalty against it should be a severe one, and such as will indicate the solemnity and value which the community sets upon human life.—C. C. Advocate.

CAUTION!!!

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, lisen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangement as colored citzens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16*TH VIC. CAP.* 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions. and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,
DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

JOHN E. FORCE,
Publisher and Proprietor.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of the Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens.—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 5th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855,
THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.
By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.
By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.
By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.
By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.
A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.
A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.
LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper.
Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR,
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Poetry.

Bird of the Forest.

BY FLORUS B. PLIMPTON.

Bird of the forest, swift-winged and free,
Hither, O! hither return with the spring;
Hither, O! hasten o'er mountain and sea,
Minstrel of summer, thy matins to sing.
O, but to hear thee the forests among
Warble love melodies, gently and clear,
Softly as fairy bells pleasantly rung,
Sweeter than many-voiced lutes on the ear.

Bird of the forest, when o'er the sky
Tempests and whirwinds sweep darkly along,
Hast thou thy home where no tumults come nigh,
Happily floating in sunshine and song?
Oh, that like thee I might heavenward soar,
When in the midnight of sorrow oppressed,
Where earth's afflictions can trouble no more,
Singing like thee in the sweetness of rest.

Bird of the forest, hast thou thy nest
High in the mountain pine, over the sea,
Where the last smile of the sun in the west,
And his first morning glance falls upon thee?
Thus, O sweet minstrel, I long for the light,
Long for a radiant face shining above,
Shedding its smile on me morning and night,
Journeying on to the land of my love.

Prince Bull—A Fairy Tale.

Once upon a time, and of course it was in the Golden Age, and I hope you may know when that was, for I am sure I don't, though I have tried hard to find out, there lived in a rich and fertile country, a powerful Prince whose name was Bull. He had gone through a great deal of fighting in his time, about all sorts of things, including nothing; but had gradually settled down to be a steady, peaceable, good-natured, corpulent, rather sleepy Prince.

This Puissant Prince was married to a lovely Princess whose name was Fair Freedom. She had brought him a large fortune, and had borne him an immense number of children, and had set them to spinning, and farming, and engineering, and soldiering, and sailoring, and doctoring, and lawyering, and preaching, and all kinds of trades. The coffers of Prince Bull were full of treasure, his cellars were crammed with delicious wines from all parts of the world, the richest gold and silver plate that ever was seen adorned his side-boards, his sons were strong, his daughters were handsome, and in short you might have supposed that if there ever lived upon earth a fortunate and happy Prince, the name of that Prince, take him for all in all, was assuredly Prince Bull.

But, appearances, as we all know, are not always to be trusted—far from it; and if they had led to this conclusion respecting Prince Bull, they would have led you wrong, as they have often led me.

For this good Prince had two sharp thorns in his pillow, two hard knots in his crown, two heavy loads on his mind, two unbridled night-mares in his sleep, two rocks ahead in his course. He could not by any means get servants to suit him, and he had a tyrannical old godmother whose name was Tape.

She was a Fairy, this Tape, and was a bright red all over. She was disgustingly prim and formal, and could never bend herself a hair's breadth this way or that way, out of her naturally crooked shape. But she was very potent in her wicked art. She could stop the fastest thing in the world, change the strongest thing into the weakest, and the most useful into the most useless. To do this she had only to put her cold hand upon it, and repeat her own name, Tape. Then it withered away.

At the Court of Prince Bull—at least I don't mean literally at his court, because he was a very genteel Prince, and readily yielded to his godmother, when she always reserved that for his hereditary Lords and Ladies—in the dominions of Prince Bull, among the great mass of the community who were called in the language of that polite country the Mobs and the Snobs, were a number of very ingenious men, who were always busy with some invention or other, for promoting the prosperity of the Prince's subjects and augmenting the Prince's power. But, whenever they submitted their models for the Prince's approval, his godmother stepped forward, laid her hand upon them, and said "Tape." Hence it came to pass, that when any particularly good discovery was made, the discoverer usually carried it off to some other Prince, in foreign parts, who had no old godmother who said Tape. This was not on the whole an advantageous state of things for Prince Bull, to the best of my understanding.

The worst of it, was, that Prince Bull had in the course of years lapsed into a state of subjection to this unlucky godmother, that he never made any serious effort to rid himself of her tyranny. I have said this was the worst of it, but there I was wrong, because there is a worse consequence still, behind. The Prince's numerous family became so downright sick and tired of Tape, that when they should have helped the Prince out of the difficulties into which that evil creature led him, they fell into a dangerous habit of moodily keeping away from him in an impassive and indifferent manner, as though they had quite forgotten that no harm could happen to the Prince their father, without its inevitably affecting themselves.

Such was the aspect of affairs at the court of Prince Bull, when this great Prince found it necessary to go to war with Prince Bear. He had been for some time very doubtful of his servants, who, besides being indolent and addicting to enriching their families at his expense, domineered over him dreadfully; threatening to discharge themselves if they were found the least fault with, pretending that they had done a wonderful amount of work when they had done nothing, making the most unmeaning speeches that ever were heard in the Prince's name, and uniformly showing themselves to be very inefficient indeed. Though, that some of them had excellent characters from previous situations is not to be denied. Well! Prince Bull called his servants together, and said to them one and all, "Send out my army against Prince Bear. Clothe it, arm it, feed it, and provide it with all necessaries and contingencies, and I will pay the piper! Do your duty by my brave troops," said the Prince, "and do it well, and I will pour out my treasure like water, to defray the cost. Who ever heard ME complain of money well laid out!" Which indeed he had reason for saying, inasmuch as he was well known to be a generous and munificent Prince.

When the servants heard these words, they sent out the army against Prince Bear, and they set the army tailors to work, and the army provision merchants, and the makers of guns both great and small, and the gunpowder makers, and the makers of ball, shell, and shot; and they bought up all manner of stores and ships, without troubling their heads about the price, and appeared to be so busy that the good Prince rubbed his hands, and (using a favourite expression of his), said, "It's all right!" But, while they were thus employed, the Prince's godmother, who was a great favourite with those servants, looked in upon them continually all day long, and whenever she popped in her head at the door, said, "How do you do, my children? What are you doing here?" "Official business, godmother." "Oho!" says this wicked Fairy, "—Tape!" And then the business all went wrong, whatever it was, and the servants' heads became so addled and muddled that they thought they were doing wonders.

Now, this was very bad conduct on the part of the vicious old nuisance, and she ought to have been strangled, even if she had stopped here; but, she didn't stop here, as you shall learn. For, a number of the Prince's subjects, being very fond of the Prince's army who were the bravest of men, assembled together and provided all manner of eatables and drinkables, and books to read, and clothes to wear, and tobacco to smoke, and candles to burn, and nailed them up in great packing cases, and put them aboard a great many ships to be carried out to that brave army in the cold and inclement country where they were fighting Prince Bear. Then, up comes this wicked Fairy as the ships were weighing anchor, and says, "How do you do, my children? What are you doing here?"—"We are going with all these comforts to the army, godmother." "Oho!" says she, "A Pleasant voyage, my darling. Tape!" And from that time forth, those enchanted ships went sailing, against wind and tide, and rhyme and reason, round and round the world, and whenever they touched at any port, were ordered off immediately, and could never deliver their cargoes anywhere.

This, again, was very bad conduct on the part of the vicious old nuisance, and she ough to have strangled for it if she had done nothing worse; but, she did do something worse still, as you shall learn. For, she got astride of an official broomstick, and muttered as a spell those two sentences: "On Her Majesty's service," and "I have the honour to be sir, your most obedient servant," and presently alighted in the cold and inclement country where the army of Prince Bull were encamped to fight the army of Prince Bear. On the seashore of that country, she found piled together a number of houses for the army to live in, and a quantity of provisions for the army to live upon, and a quantity of clothes for the army to wear; while sitting in the mud gazing at them, were a group of officers as red to look at as the wicked old woman herself. So, she said to one of them, "Who are you, my darling, and how do you do?" "I am the Quarter-master General's Department, godmother, and I am pretty well." Then she said to another, "Who are you, my darling, and how do you do?" "I am the Commissariat Department, godmother, and I am pretty well." Then she said to another, "Who are you, my darling, and how do you do?" "I am the head of the Medical Department, godmother, and I am pretty well." Then, she said to some gentlemen scented with lavender, who kept themselves at a great distance from the rest, "And who are you, my pretty pets, and how do you do?" And they answered, "We-aw-are-the-aw-Staff-aw-Department. godmother, and we are very well indeed." "I am delighted to see you all, my beauties," says this wicked old Fairy, "—Tape!" Upon that, the houses, clothes and provisions, all mouldered away; and the soldiers who were sound fell sick; and the soldiers who were sick, died miserably; and the noble army of Prince Bull perished.

When the dismal news of his great loss was carried to the Prince, he suspected his godmother very much indeed; but, he knew that his servants must have kept company with the malicious beldame, and must have given way to her, and therefore he resolved to turn those servants out of their places. So, he called to him a Roebuck who had the gift of speech, and he said, "Good Roebuck, tell them they must go." So, the good Roebuck delivered his message, so like a man that you might have supposed him to be nothing but a man and they were turned out—but, not without warning, for that they had had a long time. And now comes the most extraordinary part of the history of this Prince. When he had turned out those servants, of course he wanted others. What was his astonishment to find that in all his dominions, which contained no less than twenty-seven millions of people, there were not five-and-twenty servants altogether! They were so lofty about it, too, that instead of discussing whether they should hire themselves as servants to Prince Bull, they turned things topsyturvey, and considered whether as a favour, they should hire Prince Bull to be their master! While they were arguing this point among themselves quite at their leasure, the wicked old red fairy was incessantly going up and down, knocking at the doors of twelve of the oldest of the five-and-twenty, who were the oldest inhabitants in all that country, and whose united ages amounted to one thousand, saying, "Will you hire Prince Bull for your master? Will you hire Prince Bull for your master?" To which, one answered, "I will, if next door will;" and another, "I can't if he, she or they, might, could, would, or should." And all this time Prince Bull's affairs were going to rack and ruin.

At last, Prince Bull in the height of his perplexity assumed a thoughtful face, as if he were struck by an entirely new idea. The wicked old Fairy, seeing this, was at his elbow directly, and said, "How do you do, my Prince, and what are you thinking of?" "I am thinking, godmother," says he, "that among all the seven-and-twenty millions of my subjects who have never been in service, there are men of intellects and business who have made me very famous both among my friends and enemies." "Aye, truly?" says the Fairy. "Aye, truly," says the Prince. "And what then?" says the Fairy. "Why, then," says he, "since the regular old classes of servants do so ill, are so hard to get, and carry it with so high a hand, perhaps I might try to make good servants of some of these." The words had no sooner passed his lips than she returned, chuckling, "You think so, do you? Indeed my Prince!—Tape!" Thereupon he directly forgot what he was thinking of, and cried out lamentably to the old servants, "O, do come and hire your poor old master! Pray do! On any terms!"

And this, for the present, finishes the story of Prince Bull. I wish I could wind it up by saying that he lived happy ever afterwards, but I cannot in my conscience say so; for, with Tape at his elbow, and his estranged children fatally repelled by her from coming near him, I do not, to tell you the plain truth, believe in the possibility of such an end to it.—Household Words.

Miscellaneous.

☞ THOMAS HOOD describes an intended duel which was prevented by an amicable arrangement made upon the ground. The parties—Mr. Bray and Mr. Clay—rivals for the affections of Miss Lucy Bell, find it necessary to appeal to arms:

But first they found a friend apiece,
This pleasant thought to give—
That when they both were dead, they'd have
Two seconds yet to live.

To measure out the ground, not long
The seconds next forbore
And having taken one rash step,
They took a dozen more.

They next prepared each pistol pan,
Against the deadly strife;
By putting-in the prime of death,
Against the prime of life.

Now all was ready for the foes;
But when they took their stands,
Fear made them tremble so, they found
They both were shaking hands.

Said Mr. C., to Mr. B.,
"Here one of us may fall,
And like St. Paul's Cathedral now,
Be doomed to have a ball.

"I do confess I did attach
Misconduct to your name!
If I withdraw the charge, will then
Your ramrod do the same?"

Said Mr. B., "I do agree:—
But think of Honor's courts,—
If we be off without a shot,
There will be strange reports.

"But look! the morning now is bright,
Though cloudy it begun;
Why can't we aim above, as if
We had called out the sun?"

So up into the harmless air
Their bullets they did send;
And may all other duels have
That upshot in the end!

The Family of the Late Czar.

The Emperor Nicholas leaves the following numerous family:—

His wife, the Empress Alexandria, Fedorowna, (formerly called Frederica-Louisa-Charlotte-Whillimina,) daughter of the late Frederick-William III., King of Prussia, was born July 13, 1798, and is in very weak health. The issue of this marriage are:

First.—Alexander Nicolaivitch Ceshrovitch, the present Emperor, born April 29, 1818, married April 28, 1841, Maria Alexandrovna, the present empress, (formerly Maximilienne-Wilhelmina-Augusta-Sophia-Maria) born May 8, 1824, daughter of the late Louis II., Grand Duke of Hesse.

Issue of marriage:—Nicholas Alexandrovitch, the present crown prince, born September 20, 1843; Wladimir Alexandrovitch, born April 22, 1847; Alexis Alexandrovitch, born January 14, 1850.

Second.—Maria Nicolaievna, born August 8, 1819; married July 14, 1839, to Maximilian, Duke of Leuchtenber, Prince of Eichtedt; became a widow, November 1, 1852.

Third.—Olga Nicolaievna, born September 11, 1822; married to Charles, Prince Royal of Wurtemburg, July 13, 1846.

Fourth.—Constantine Nicolaievitch, born September 21, 1827; married, September 11, 1848, to Alexandra Josevona, daughter of Joseph, Duke of Sax-Altenburgh; was born July 20, 1830; issue, a son and a daughter.

Fifth.—Nicholas Nicolaievitch, born August 8 1831.

Sixth.—Michael Nicolaievitch, born October, 25, 1832.

The late Czar also leaves two sisters; Maria Paulovna, Dowager, Grand Duchess of Saxe-Weimar, and Anna Paulovna, widow of William II, King of Holland. Also a sister-in-law, Helena Paulovna, widow of the Grand Duke Michael, and daughter of the late Prince Paul, of Wurtemberg. This lady's daughter, the Grand Duches Catherine Michælovna, is married to the Duke George, of Mecklenburg, Strelitz.

MASON AND DIXON'S LINE.—What was the origin and purpose of it? We hear it frequently spoken of as connected with slavery, and as originally relating to that subject. Nothing can be further from the truth—at the time that line was established slavery existed on both sides of it. A brief account of its origin may be of some interest. As early as the year 1682, a dispute arose between William Penn and Lord Baltimore respecting the constuction of their respective grants, of what now form the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland. Lord Baltimore claimed to and included the 40th degree of north latitude; and William Penn mildly yet firmly resisted the claim. The debatable land was one degree of 69 English miles on the south of Pennsylvania, and extended west as far as the State itself. The matter was finally brought into the Court of Chancery in England, and after tedious delays, on the 15th day of May, 1757, Lord Chancellor Hardwick made a decree, awarding costs against Lord Baltimore, and directing that commissioners should be appointed to mark the boundaries between the parties. The Commissioners appointed met at New Castle on the 15th day of November, 1775, and not being able to agree, separated. After a further litigation and delay, the whole matter was settled by the mutual agreement between the surviving heirs of the original litigants. In the year 1761, Mr. Charles Mason, of the Royal Observatory, was sent to Pennsylvania with all the needful astronomical instruments to measure a degree of latitude. That duty he performed, and a report of his proceedings was made to the Royal Secretary of London, for the year 1767. This Mr. Mason and Jeremiah Dixon were appointed to run the line in dispute, which appears to have been done in conformity with the Lord Chancellor's decree. This is the famous "Mason and Dixon's line," and the boundary between Pennsylvania on the South and Maryland on the North. Any one desirous of more detailed information will find it in Douglas's History of America, published in Boston in 1751, Proud's History of Pennsylvania, the Memoirs of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and 1 Vessey's Reports, 352, Penn.—Lord Baltimore. Little did the actors in this matter think that in after times the line established with so much trouble and expense, would ever be connected with a subject calculated to shake a nation to its centre.

The Press in Canada.

Within the last few years a literary spirit has been manifesting itself to an unusual and most gratifying extent in the various Colonies. They are creating for themselves a Periodical Literature which cannot fail to prove of great and lasting benefit to everything pertaining to morals, religion, and good government among them. Canada is not behind the other Colonies in this respect. It has already a number of excellent general papers, with a few of a more religious character. Among these is the Canadian Independent, a small but useful publication, comprising, as it does, excellent matter, both original and selected. It is so cheap that even paupers may procure it, and so replete with evangelical instruction, that to peruse will be to be profited by it.

The Montreal Witness, now in the tenth volume contains a valuable and somewhat copious digest of all important matters both British and American. For an insignificant expense, there is here a large amount of useful and interesting information, comprising all sorts of subjects. It is an excellent compend of the literary and other matter scattered through the Journals both of the Mother Country and the United States. We are amused to see, from their Address at the opening of the year, that, like other Journals, they have some complaints. One is that the paper sometimes fails to reach its destination—a complaint not unfrequent, it appears, in Canada more than Australia, and even in the Mother Country. On account of this irregularity, some hot-headed subscribers have given up the Journal; on which the Editor very properly remarks:—"The individual who gives up a paper because he does not receive it regularly, must do without one altogether." Again, they have complaints that the news is old It were strange if English or European news should appear there and on this side of the Atlantic on the same day; and, in the case of all weekly papers, of necessity some part of the intelligence must be at least six days old. But what of it? The Witness, however, tells us, that another ground of complaint is price; but it seems this complaint is very limited, and the bulk of subscribers seem willing to increase their subscriptions, as circumstances, such as the expense of labour and of the paper and composition, require it.

Canadian emigrants should send these and the other papers by thousands to their friends at home.

The Jews of the City of New York have no less than thirty-one charitable and mutual benefit societies among them. They have also ten well-built synagogues, some of which are capacious and elegant.

VICIOUS PLEASURES.—Centres, or wooden frames, are put under the arches of a bridge, to remain no longer than till the latter is consolidated. Even so, pleasures are the Devil's scaffolding to build a habit upon: that formed and steady, the pleasures are sent for firewood, and the hell begins in this life.

CANADA.

The manifestations of a republican spirit are plainly to be noticed in our Northern neighbor. Secret societies, whose aim is the Independence of the American Colonies, are said to have been formed throughout the provinces. The work of republicanizing the colonial governments goes steadily on. Great Britain is wiser now than when our fathers rose in rebellion, and the Independence of the Colonies already finds many advocates in the parent country. We have little doubt that Canada has only to express her wish, with any degree of unanimity, for Independence, and it will be granted to her after a few years consideration by the British people.

The feeling doubtless is much stronger for Independence, than for Annexation to the United States. That the latter probably will come about sooner or later, we do not deny. Should such an event occur—which may Heaven and the good sense of the masses forbid!—as the often threatened secession of a considerable number of the Southern States from the Union, doubtless an annexation would then take place very soon with the British Provinces. Of course if those Provinces willed it, the British Government would not be able to prevent it. The area of the British possessions in this country, is, we judge, even greater than that of the United States, including our recent acquisitions of California and New Mexico. At least half of this area, we should suppose, is capable of cultivation. Connected with the Union as it is, it would make one of the greatest nations on the globe. But we have no desire to annex the Canadas and the other British possessions, until they think it for their own interest to be connected with the Union, and they can come "without money, and without price." We neither would have them bribed into coming, or the mother country bribed to let them come. Though Canada especially juts down into our northern boundary in the most inviting manner to a Filibuster imagination—though it looks on the map exactly like a big bite made by the teeth of the British lion in our united shoulder of mutton—and though there are twenty military and commercial reasons why the Canadas are necessary to our safety and "self-preservation," where there is one relative to Cuba, still we do not feel it right to covet in the least this neighbouring property, which would straighten and fill up so beautifully our northern line.

No—even though the St Lawrence, the natural avenue for the immense commerce of the great lakes, empties into the ocean through an alien country, we do not consider this a sufficient reason for striving to annex, by fair means or foul, the adjacent territory of New Brunswick. Though some argue that we must have Cuba, because of its position relative to the mouth of the Mississippi.

No—though there is not one sensible reason urged for the acquisition of Cuba, which cannot be urged with tenfold force for the acquisition of Canada, we preach up no filibustering doctrines relative to our northern neighbours, but desire to do by them, precisely as we would like them to do by us And yet we believe that the Canadas and the other British Provinces, are "graviating" towards this Union with threefold the force and certainty of Cuba. In fact, we are free to say—notwithstanding the predictions of such eminent gentlemen as Messrs. Everett, Fillmore, Marcy, &c.—that there is no natural gravitation on the part of either the Spanish or Creole mind towards the people of the United States.

If we are rightly informed, the Creoles of Louisiana have not amalgamated in spirit and feeling with the American portion of the population, to this day. And if Cuba were made to-morrow an Independent State of this Union, its population at the close of a century would be as alien to us in social customs, feeling and sympathy as they are now. The Americans who would go there, enervated by the climate and the manners, would not be able to Americanize the Cubans, but would be Cubanized themselves. All history teaches the lesson, that even conquering races are in this way finally conquered by those whom they have subdued. This probably was the reason that the Jews were commanded to drive out or exterminate the Canaanites. Vanquished Greece conquered its Roman conquerors. Captured Capua conquered the veteran forces of Hannibal. The effeminate Romans subdued the victorious and hardy barbarians. The Saxons conquered the proud and exclusive Normans. No people thus that possesses and cultivates the soil of a country, can really be overcome by aliens. If the latter would really establish themselves, they must drive out or exterminate the great mass of those whom they have annexed or subdued.

We argue therefore from this principle, which is, we believe, generally admitted by students of history, that inasmuch as the great masses of the population in the West Indies—including Cuba—are blacks and mulattoes, that the colored race ultimately will crowd out the whites, the Creoles as well as the American born. Our mercantile readers know that a depreciated currency will drive a better one out of circulation—even if the latter were originally of equal amount. But if the mass of depreciated currency greatly exceeds that of the gold and silver, for instance, the latter will soon vanish from circulation. And the white faces are now vanishing from the West Indies, about as rapidly as the silver coin did some years ago from our currency, when the yellow pieces began to flow in by the bushels from California. The whites who stay in the west Indies, ultimately will find it necessary to infuse the fashionable tinge into their blood.

But, the same principles that repels the West Indies from us—though they will soon begin to attract the colored people of the United States, and our colonization friends should be prepared to aid this exodus, beneficial and joyful as it will be to all parties concerned—on the same principle Canada is attracted to us. For the population of Canada is composed of similar elements to our own—an Anglo-Saxon basis, mingled with the Celtic French and Irish. The proportion of French is not so great in this country as in Canada—though there is a great deal of French blood in the veins of our people, derived from the numerous Huguenot settlers, who came at an early period of our history, and thus exercised a greater influence upon us than a much larger number would at the present time. We have, however, a large proportionate infusion probably of the Irish—which is also Celtic blood, and thus tends to produce a somewhat similar result on the leading race. Therefore, for all practical purposes, the people of the States, and of the British provinces, are kindred people—and, from this very fact, will graviate, and are rapidly gravitating, towards one another.

But politicians—mere trading, huckstering politicians—looking not at great and controling facts and principles, but merely at straws, to see which way the little petty wind of the hour blows—ignore these important and controlling considerations. Are we unjust to them?—recal but one recent fact to your mind. Which of all your "great" politicians and "statesmen" foresaw the coming of the serious "Know-Nothing" gale? It was the business of their lives to watch "the signs of the times"—with "fear and trembling" too—and yet not one of them, we repeat it, not one of them, knew of the tempest until it was upon them—and then the most of them said, like the antediluvian whom Noah refused to take into the ark, that they "did not believe it was going to be much of a shower!" And where are they now? Strangling in the wild waters.

Do not misunderstand us. We are not justifying that "Know-Nothing" movement—nor condemning it. It is not our business to do either. Our business is to conduct a neutral paper devoted to "morality," and, we may add, common sense, in as independent a manner as our position will admit. We simply bring forward this fact to prove the ignorance and incompetency of our professed "statesmen" and "first men." That we ourselves really comprehend the popular heart a little, was proven by our remarks upon the speeches of certain Senators relative to the Papal Envoy, Bedini.

And the Maine Law enthusiasm and era—which of these "great" statesmen knew that that was coming? We believe that you might have gone into that respectable assemblage of solemn dulness and dignified puerility, the Senate of the United States, and polled the whole body—only one month before that Law was passed by the state of Maine—and five men out of six would have pronounced its passage by even one State of the Union, an impossibility. Probably not three Senators out of the entire number, foresaw this moral storm of Temperance, before it was upon them. And yet "these are thy gods, oh Israel!"

We instance such undeniable facts to prove that our professedly wise men are merely acquainted with the feeling of the hour. They pander to it, unknowing what the really living Present is brooding over, and what the Future necessarily must bring forth. We tell them boldly to their faces, that—if you leave both Canada and Cuba to the simple operations of "gravitation" and "inevitable destiny"—Canada will some day be united with this country, and that Cuba never will. Not natural causes—nothing but the strong hand—will ever make Cuba ours. And if we should reach forth our arm over the natural boundaries of truth and right, and pluck it, its taste may be sweet enough in the mouth, but it will be "bitter in the belly." Calhoun is said to have compared it to that "forbidden fruit" which, in the garden of Eden, might not be touched. Whether he did or not—and he, of all our recent "statesmen," was about the only sincere and downright honest man—it is the fact. And though those who foresaw not the coming of the Temperance and "Know Nothing" storms, may sneer at this assertion—the men who live ten years from this time will acknowledge its truth.—Saturday Evening Post.

Don't be Hasty.

1. Because you will be likely to treat quite lightly two very good friends of yours, Reason and Conscience, who will not have a chance to speak.

2. Because you will have to travel over the same ground in company with our Sober Second Thought, who will be more likely to have with him a whip of scorpions than a bunch of flowers.

3. Because the words or actions involved in it are more likely than otherwise to be misunderstood, and, therefore to be severely judged.

4. Because this is one way to please and give great advantage to a great enemy of yours, one powerful enough to be called "the Prince of this World," and who has caught more people than can be counted in this very trap.

5. Because in so doing are you likely to be a fellow-traveller in such company as follows: "He that is hasty with his feet sinneth" "He that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly." "Seest thou a man hasty in words? there is more hope of a fool than of him." "The thoughts of every one that is hasty tend only to want."

6. Because such a fire may be kindled that it cannot be put out even by all the water a whole engine company can throw, with Second Thought for their captain.

Anti-Slavery.

From the London Anti-Slavery Advocate.

Rochester Anti-Slavery Bazaar.

A few days since, a friend in Liverpool sent an article for our adoption and insertion in the present number of the Anti-Slavery Advocate. As it was penned in the style editorial, and we should have been responsible for its contents, we are surprised that our friend, who is, we hope, a constant reader of the Advocate, could suppose we would so far stultify ourselves as to accept his offer. His article gives an account of the Rochester Anti-Slavery Bazaar, and contains an implied eulogy of the Anti-Slavery Sewing Circle, under whose auspices it is held, for the independent position they have chosen, and their determination 'to co-operate with all whose love for the Anti-Slavery cause rises superior to their connexion with any particular party or sect of abolitionists.'

Now, we wish that our position in this respect should be clearly understood. We welcome all earnest anti-slavery effort, and are glad of all that is done to promote the anti-slavery cause. But our love for the cause does not rise so far superior to our connexion 'with any particular party or sect of abolitionists,' as to preclude a very decided opinion that there is a better way of doing everything, and that the anti-slavery cause is no exception to this rule. Ever since an interest in that cause was first aroused in our minds, seventeen years ago, by the eloquence of George Thompson and the pen of Harriet Martineau, we have been a reader of anti-slavery newspapers, and in constant communication with Abolitionists of great diversity of opinion. The result is that, amidst much change of views on many important subjects, we have seen no reason to change our opinion that in no way can the abolition of slavery be so well promoted, as by an adhesion to the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society. They labour by indefatigable, honest, and fearless appeals to the public conscience, through the medium of the press, the pulpit, and the platform, to reform the corrupt public opinion of the United States; they show that the halls of legislature, the seats of justice, the synods, the conferences, and yearly meetings, are polluted by the contact of slavery; they come out from pro-slavery sects: and abstain from the most cherished privilege of American citizens—that of participation in political privileges—rather than swear to uphold a constitution which they consider pro-slavery in its tenor and operation. Nothing can be more catholic than their organization; they admit of no religious tests, and every one is welcome to their platform who is willing to help them. So firmly are we convinced of the wisdom and honesty of their course, that they have our entire sympathy. We think it an honor to be counted as one of their fellow-laborers in ever so humble a way, and believe the welfare of the race to be identified with the attainment of the objects at which they aim.

At the same time, we are far from insisting on unity with the American Anti-Slavery Society as indispensable to our sympathy and good wishes. Some very good people are unwilling to draw in the same yoke with persons who differ widely from them in religious opinions. We respect their scruples, and are glad to see them trying to help the slave in their own way. There are others who place greater reliance than we do on the free-labour produce movement; and to these we nevertheless wish God speed.

But it is quite another matter when we are asked to assist a means of helping the anti-slavery cause, which, in our opinion, does more mischief to the slave by its hostility to its best friends, than it can counterbalance by its own direct labor in its behalf. The Rochester Anti Slavery Sewing Society, which has held the Bazaar that our Liverpool friend wants us to commend to our readers, devotes we believe a large portion of its income to the support of Frederick Douglass's Paper. This paper and its editor are strenuous in their efforts to depreciate that anti-slavery instrumentality which we esteem above all others, and those abolitionists whom we respect most highly for their work's sake. For the truth of this assertion, we need only refer to the letters of Communipaw which have lately appeared in its columns, and which in our opinion are disgraceful to the writer and no credit to the paper or its editor.

In proof that we are animated by no narrow or exclusive spirit, we point to the reports of the anti-slavery lectures of the Rev. Edward Mathews, and to the articles from his pen, which have appeared in the Advocate from the commencement of this paper. This gentleman does not belong to the American Anti-Slavery Society, nor has he, to our knowledge, any special sympathy with it. But as we believe him to be a zealous and devoted laborer in the anti-slavery cause, who has proved his faith by his works, and is determined to test the churches both in England and the United States, by their own declared principles, we are glad to co-operate with him by every means in our power.

We do not demand unity of views from any, but we do depreciate bigoted and malignant hostility; and we will not knowingly promote the objects of those who make it part of their business as abolitionists, to assail the American Anti-Slavery Society, and to vilify some of the very best and truest friends of the slave.

The American Board of Foreign Missions.

By the last European mail, the following communication from the Secretary of the Bristol and Clifton Anti-Slavery Society was received by the General Agent of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. The important and interesting character of its contents impels us to lay it before our readers without delay.

The American Board of Foreign Missions appears to be using every means, which a cautious diplomacy can suggest, to get the British Churches and ministers committed to its support and advocacy. The 'religious' papers of this country, with one consent, are shouting aloud the praises of the American Board, on account of their recent action in the case of the Choctaw schools, as if that action could purge their pro-slavery sins, or hide the enormous fact of their religious connection, fellowship, and co-membership with men, who are themselves the owners of human beings, (often of members of the same church with themselves,) and who justify and defend themselves as right in itself, and as in accordance with the Word and will of God. Even the New York Independent, as our readers have already learned with the deepest sorrow, is supporting and extolling the American Board, and denouncing Parker Pillsbury for his frank, explicit, and manly exposure of the pro-slavery character of the Board,—while its editor, (in the spirit which we have been accustomed to find in the New York Observer, and which occasions no surprise there,) refuses to allow Mr. Pillsbury an opportunity to defend himself, in the columns where he had attacked Mr. Pillsbury in a very gross manner! Does the advocacy of the American Board of Missions drag the Independent down to this? We earnestly trust that the British churches, at this advanced stage of the anti-slavery question, will not suffer themselves to be drawn into alliance with the slaveholding religion of this country. Such an alliance the American churches are seeking now, as their only salvation. But we are keeping our readers from the Bristol letter:—

Bristol, (Eng.) March 8, 1855.

I write to you by this mail, on behalf of our Anti-Slavery Committee, to beg you will ascertain for us, with as little delay as possible, the correctness of a statement made last night in Bristol, by the Rev. Cuthbert Young—which is, that 'Since the Hartford meeting of last year, Mrs. H. B. Stowe, and her brother Rev. H. Ward Beecher, have taken the American Board of Foreign Missions heartily by the hand.' Rev. C. Young is Secretary of the Society lately formed in London, termed the 'Western Asia Missions Aid Society,' (references to which have frequently appeared in recent American Anti-Slavery journals.) The above Society acts in concert with the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and sends a large portion of the funds it collects to the officials of that Board.

At the close of Mr. Young's address to the Bristol meeting, last night, a resolution was passed, responding to Mr. Young's appeal for aid. To this an amendment was proposed by Rev. George Armstrong, suggesting, that as the Western Asia Missions Aid Society was connected with the American Board of Foreign Missions—an organization stained by the contributions and controlled by the influence of slaveholders,—British Christians should establish a separate agency for their missionary efforts in Turkey, or should co-operate with a society in America entirely uncontaminated by slavery. Such, (he learned,) was the character of the American Missionary Association, of which Rev. H. Ward Beecher is understood to be a leading member.

Rev. Mr. Young interrupted Mr. Armstrong more than once, at first endeavoring to prove the amendment out of order, and then maintaining that co-operation with the American Board had not the remotest tendency to sustain slavery: that when this idea was presented to his Committee in London, they 'quite laughed at it:' that, the public must not think of listening to the reckless statements about the American Board made by Mr. Parker Pillsbury, who had attacked it in a most unjustifiable way at the recent Anti-Slavery Conference in London: that, instead of the Board bearing the character which was represented by parties in England, Mr H.W. Beecher and Mrs. Stowe, since the Hartford Convention, had taken it heartily by the hand. Mr. Young then quoted an article from the New York Independent of Feb. 15, which paper he said was edited by Rev. H. W. Beecher, and to which Mrs. Stowe was one of the chief contributors. The article (which Mr. Young led the meeting to infer was written or at least 'endorsed' by Mr. Beecher) consisted of comments on the proceedings of the late London Anti-Slavery Conference; defending the Board of Foreign Missions from the charges brought against it by Rev. Edward Matthews, James Vincent, S. R. Ward, and Mr. Parker Pillsbury; speaking in terms of disparagement of the first two gentlemen, and being especially violent in its attacks upon Mr. Pillsbury, on whom it declared no reliance must be placed, and warned British Christians against taking that gentleman as a sample of the true friends of religion and humanity in the United States. If you, or the editor of the Anti-Slavery Standard, have access to the New York Independent of Feb. 15,* will you refer to it? Mr. Young did not read from it, but merely held it in his hand as he quoted its contents, and I had only an opportunity of glancing cursorily at it after meeting. I may not have reported some passages which would make the fact of Mr. Beecher writing such an article, or consenting to give it his editorial seal less unintelligible than it at this distance appears. Should Mr. Young succeed in proving to the Evangelical Christians of Great Britain, among whom he presses the claims of the American Board of Missions, that the authoress of the Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin, and her brother, are giving the weight of their unqualified sanction to this Board, it is all they would require to commend the Board to their confidence and sympathy.

The subject of the support given to slaveholders by British co-operation with this Board, and of the relations it holds to the system, has been brought before the notice of the 'Western Asia Missions Aid Society,' in an admirable Tract lately published by the Edinburgh Anti Slavery Society. This pamphlet, together with the reply made to the Secretary of that Society, with a copy of which we have been favoured, shall be forwarded to you by this mail. You will perceive that the minutes of the 'Western Mission' Committee do not meet the questions raised in the Edinburgh pamphlet. But from their Secretary's note, it appears that they decline expressing approval of all the agencies of the Board. Hence Mr. Young's assertion, that Mrs. Stowe and Mr. H. W. Beecher 'take it cordially by the hand,' was the more startling, for no information has reached this country of any change having been made in the position of the Board, 'since the Hartford meeting,' which could explain how the authoress of the Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin, or the distinguished clergyman whose earnest exhortation in his recent lecture before the New York Anti-Slavery Society gave evidence of his unabated zeal for the cause, have been satisfied to give in their adhesion to the American Board of Missions! Yet on the other hand, sure they would not consent to stultify their former testimony by countenancing the Board while it retains the character that has hitherto been ascribed to it, and continues to be deeply involved in the maintenance of slavery.

No one seconded Mr. Armstrong's amendment; but the Chairman Richard Ball, Esq., protested against lending any, the remotest sanction to the sinful system of American slavery. He said he would not touch it with a pitchfork, nor sit down to table with a slaveholder, nor admit him to religious fellowship; that he could not sleep in his bed, if he knew that taking the chair at that meeting could be construed into sanction of the support given to slavery by the churches of America, which Rev. Albert Barnes had truly declared to be responsible for its continuance. Rev. J. Burder also bore his testimony against slavery, and said that on no consideration would he have appeared at this meeting unless persuaded that by so doing, he was in no way compromising his anti-slavery principles. You will perceive from the tone of these speakers, that there is some real anti-slavery feeling amongst us, but that the different sects still stand sadly in need of light respecting the connections of religious organizations in America with Slavery, and of the injurious effects produced by extending to them British countenance and co-operation.

Copies of the Edinburgh Tract on Turkish Missions were sent by the British and Clifton A. S. Society to about twenty-four ministers and other gentlemen, who were thought likely to attend the meeting on behalf of the Western Asia Mission, with a note bespeaking a careful examination of the statements concerning the American Board. The President of the A. S. Society was privately informed by Mr. Ball, (the Chairman of the meeting,) that one Baptist minister of influence had in consequence declined taking part in the proceedings, on the same ground; and the names of others who staid away, and who refused to read from their pulpits a notice of the meetings, have been given; but no one but Mr. Armstrong would undertake the disagreeable and unpopular task of publicly explaining the reasons that existed for discountenancing co-operation with the American Board of Missions in the great work of evangelizing Turkey.

The following is the amendment moved by the Rev. George Armstrong, but not seconded:—

Whereas, this meeting having just grounds for regarding the agency of the Rev. Cuthbert Young, in behalf of the Western Asia Mission Society, as more or less connected with the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions,—a fact sufficiently revealed in the 'Circular' issued by an association recently formed in London, chiefly at the instigation of Rev. C. Young, and by the marked satisfaction thereat expressed on the part of the American Board of Missions, representing as it does, the leading religious denominations of the United States of America, which as a whole have been grievously faithless to the cause of the down-trodden slave, and have been justly described as 'the bulwark of American slavery; therefore,

Resolved,—That this meeting refuses to extend its sympathy or co-operation to an agency so tainted; and would testify its interest in Christian missions in the East, either by independent British agency, or by co-operation with the 'American Missionary Association' established in New York; of which Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, the brother of Mrs. Stowe, is an influential member and supporter.

☞ We have also received the following copy of the reply of the Secretary of the Western Asia Missions Aid Society to the Secretary of the Edinburgh Anti-Slavery Society:—

WESTERN ASIA MISSIONS AID SOCIETY.
7, Adam St. Strand, London, Feb. 12, 1855.

The Rev. Cuthbert Young presents his respects to Miss Wigham, and begs to state that he has laid her communication before the last meeting of the Committee of this Society.

The following is a copy of the minute on the subject, adopted at the meeting:—

Relations of the American Board to Slavery.

The Secretary having read a communication from the Secretary of the Ladies' Emancipation Committee at Edinburgh, (accompanied by a pamphlet,) urging the Committee to employ British rather than American agents in Turkey, on the ground that the American Board is involved in the support of slavery in the United States; it was—

Resolved,—That the abolition of slavery is not a subject that lies within the functions of this Committee; and that the Secretary be instructed to write to that effect in reply to the communication.

Mr. Young begs further to state, that while the Committee deeply regret the existence of slavery in the United States, and the sanction given to the system, directly or indirectly, by so many of the American churches, they do not see as a Committee, they are called upon to protest against it.

They do not consider themselves responsible for the entire proceedings of the American Board in all countries; and as regards the missions aided by them in the Turkish empire, the appropriations of money are made not for the support of American Missionaries, but of Armenian, Greek, and Syrian native agents, and for education.

Mr. Young requests Miss Wigham's attention to the fact that the ground taken at the last annual meeting of the American Board is regarded by the great portion of abolitionists as a great step in advance.

☞ This Rev. Cuthbert Young appears to be as wily as a fox, and as slippery as an eel. In regard to the American Board, the real and exact truth is, that it still occupies the same position it has ever done concerning slaveholders, slaveholding, and non-fellowship with the anti-slavery movement. It is still pro-slavery in its spirit, attitude, counsel and government. No countenance ought to be given to it by British Christians.

* The article in question will be found in the Liberator of Feb 23, in the 'Refuge of Oppression.' The editor of the Independent has been asked if he would allow Mr. Pillsbury to reply to it in his columns, and he has refused.—Ed. Lib.

Extraordinary Slave Case—A Gift of Ex-President Tyler Running Away.

A slave case in this city terminated last Monday in a manner quite satisfactorily to the friends of freedom, which terms now seems to embrace nearly all the inhabitants of the city. The facts are as follows:—

A colored man, who resides a few miles out of the city, in the cars from Cincinnati, on Saturday, fell into conversation with a colored girl, a fellow passenger, and learnt from her that she was a slave, on her way from Louisville, Ky., to Richmond, Va., in charge of a friend of her master. He informed her that she had a right to her freedom, inasmuch as she had come into the State by consent of her master or his agent. She manifested surprise by the inquiry, "Are we in a free State?" and at once she said she wished to be free. This conversation took place as the cars approached this city. The trains on the Wheeling route not uniting with the Cincinnati trains, in all cases, a detention of the slave girl and her company was necessary here. The colored man at once notified his acquaintances of what he had learnt from the slave girl, and they, of course, on the alert, followed the omnibus containing them, to the residence of one of the respectable families of our city, where the girl and her party alighted. In the course of the day or evening, some colored women managed to get a conversation with the slave girl, who repeated to them her desire to be free; whereupon several of the colored people set themselves about procuring a writ of habeas corpus in her behalf.

After considerable delay in enlisting an attorney in the case, in consequence of the engagements of some of them in the courts then sitting, and the refusal of others to enlist in it at all, the necessary assistance was at length obtained. Application was made to a Judge of the Supreme Court, who refused to issue a writ, or have anything to do with it, as we are informed. Application was then made to Probate Judge Jamison, who, late Saturday evening, issued a writ, returnable at nine o'clock, Monday morning. Sheriff Miller, at near midnight, rapped at the door of the house where the girl was held, and after considerable parley and delay, came forth with the girl, and took her to prison for safe keeping, until the hour for the meeting of the court on Monday. Access to her cell during Sunday was allowed her claimant and his council, and also to the colored man who swore out the writ, (Mr. Fergusson,) and his counsel.

At the appointed time the girl was brought into court, Mr. Galloway and Mr. Carrington appeared in her behalf, and Mr. Ware in behalf of the respondent.

It appeared by a statement of the parties, that the girl, whose name is Rosetta Armisted, was—according to slave law—the property of Rev. Mr. Dennison, an Episcopal clergyman, of Louisville, Kentucky; that she formerly belonged to ex-President Tyler, who gave her to his youngest daughter on her marriage to the said Rev. Mr. Dennison; that Mrs. Dennison had recently died, leaving an infant child; that the child was being conveyed to its grand-parents by a friend of the family, Dr. Jones Miller, (a brother, we believe, of John G. Miller, Esq., of this city,) accompanied by the girl as a nurse, &c.; that on their arrival at Cincinnati, finding the river not in a navigable state, Dr. Miller concluded to pass through on the railroad, not expecting any interference with the conveyance of his "property" on the route.

Dr. Miller stated to the court personally, and by his counsel, that he made no claim to the services of the girl himself, and only desired that time should be allowed to her owner to appear and prosecute his claim, if he should choose to do so. It seemed to be conceded on all hands that the girl was entitled to her freedom, if she chose to claim it. At the suggestion of her counsel, that she, being a minor, (sixteen years of age,) be placed under the charge of a guardian, to be kept until her claimant might appear, the other party at once assented to the arrangement. The girl, at the suggestion of her counsel, chose our fellow-citizen, L. G. Van Slyke, Esq., as her guardian, who gave bonds, and took her under charge, to the apparent satisfaction of all parties.

The thing was handsomely done on all sides. Our fellow-citizen, John G. Miller, Esq., distinctly stated, in his peculiarly polite manner, on the part of his friends, that they only made a question of the case, under the supposition that the girl would prefer to go with her acquaintances to see her mother and friends in Virginia; but as she had come into court, and stated her desire to remain, they did not insist upon offering any obstruction to her freedom.

A great crowd of colored men and women were in attendance at the court-room, during the pendency of this case, as might be expected; and the freed girl seemed much astonished at the greetings she met, and the congratulations she received on attaining the estate of a free woman.

We rejoice always at the rescue of a human being from the prison-house of bondage. We rejoice that, in this case, it was made to appear that the time has come when no pretence will be set up in behalf of the oppressor, in this class of cases. We trust also the precedent will do good in assuring timid Supreme Judges, and others who are afraid to act for freedom; for we do none the injustice to believe that they can be indifferent to a question of freedom or slavery.

By proclamation of the Governor General, Wednesday, the 18th inst., is to be set apart and to be observed throughout the Province as a day of Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer to Almighty God, for the success of our arms in the present war, and for the speedy attainment of a favourable and lasting peace.

Begging for Fugitives in Canada.

Who is not heartily tired of such schemes? Should one take up a paper from the States, nine times out of ten, if a reform paper, the first matter that arrests attention is, "how we had best get clothes and money for the fugitives in Canada," or Rev. Somebody would like the friends to contribute through him to the fugitives in Canada, or Brother Foote has received so many boxes, barrels, or hogsheads of clothes for the fugitives in Canada,—how much of small-pox besides, is not added. Then, Rev. ——, who is so devoted, wants aid for his institution—this colored brother has a church to build; of course, the brother has gone against the will of all the deacons, elders, trustees, and women; but it pays well, and what the brother has been doing for years, he will do. The fugitives, meantime, are working and struggling to lay up for a rainy day, and everywhere their labors are blessed.

They are complaining, too, not of starvation, scarcity of work, inhospitality from their brethren, and the many, the country over, who patronize them—no! cabbage, potatoes, pork, turnips, and corn are plenty; but the beggars are ruining them; so, like badly-used children, they have to take it out in lamenting; for this white brother, who thought they had good grounds of complaint, has—since his last confab with, or the last letter from the very dear brother, Rev. ——, of the same church, it may be,—seen cause to change his views. The story is too tiresome,—the colored people do not know what is best for them—it is not wise to encourage this complaining, especially against brother A, who is a praying Christian—and, finally, the negroes are a bore, anyhow—"they have too much intellect for their stations;" but it is questionable if it is best to encourage them to settle in Canada. Africa is a large and inviting field; good abolition brethren and sisters of the States, at the head of whom is Mrs. Stowe, think Africa is best for them; and, on the whole, it is best to encourge them to look heavenward—their time on earth, at best, is but short. Some colored brother, too, who, when he got the audience, meant to tell "on 'em," yes, who would give the beggars their due, has unaccountably made the discovery that silence against wrong pays him better, or some white brother would not like it—or a contemplated mission might be interfered with—if not, the consideration that right or wrong, "a man should not injure his prospects by telling the truth" when necessary: for brother B.'s autograph might be of service. So off he goes into a puff of the good brother, and the people are left to take care of themselves. Then, too, good brethren in the States are poor; but it would be so nice to get a few thousands, and so nice to do something for suffering humanity, at the same time; if they had the means, the evils would be remedied at once—why not they have them?—would use them better than ——, who has plenty,—would set the world right on this question in "no time." Begging is resorted to, funds flow in; then we realize the fact that self, not Canada fugitives, is the motive power.

Do the fugitives exclaim against the enormous per centage, the steady refusal to give security for thousands begged, the glaring discrepancy between professions and practice, though done in their name, the steady perversion of means obtained from donors, the "dogs of war" are at once let loose. Everybody who has no character worth preserving is suddenly aroused to a sense of its importance;—prosecutions are threatened, the colored people must be taught better—the brethren must have their fair fame vindicated by the sacred majesty of the law; at least the poor fugitives are made to feel by this threat, and the other reprimand, that silence even about their own wrongs (in a free country) is their greatest wisdom. True white brethren know that black men are right—were the case their own, they would "lash the rascals naked round the world"—every decent newspaper would be pressed into the service—church meetings, meetings of friends, committee meetings would be held for and against the men to whom mismanagement of their affairs could be imputed—men appointed by themselves, not as in the case of colored people, men who proclaim to the world their intentions, and who prosecute their schemes in spite of remonstrances from the people. We have frequently heard it said that "no people but the colored people would submit to American slavery," and there is every reason to believe that, in Canada, an opinion extensively prevails, that no class of persons have so little right to complain of the injuries inflicted upon them by begging for fugitives, for land, clothes, institutions, churches, &c., as the colored people. There is a feeling exhibited by persons usually thought to be friendly when this begging is alluded to—or, rather, when the beggars are reprimanded, that no real interest in the welfare of Canadians will warrant. There is evidently either pecuniary interest in the matter, or friend Harper's anecdote, about the fugitives being "everybody's horse," is the current opinion.

The magnitude of this begging evil naturally induces an inquiry into the means to be employed to arrest it; and when, where, and how to use them, for, unlike an individual matter, its influence, though directed against the colored people, whether fugitives or not, is reflected upon the entire mass.

Canada, so generally known as the best country in the world for the poor, without regard to complexion, is by these humanity-mongers made to appear unfit for the habitation of men. Gaunt starvation, miserable destitution, a pinching sort of abundance among the colored people, a niggardly humanity, a poor out-at-the-elbow respectability among the whites; and as an inevitable conclusion, a country poor in resources, and forbidding in all the essentials of a comfortable residence.

We repeat, the reflection against Canada should make it the duty of all well-disposed persons to aid in putting an end to such imposition. To accomplish this object, no better way do we know of than to pubblish to the world, protest after protest, against the men, whoever they may be, and wherever they may be found, who are so false to humanity as to subserve their own purposes by such means—we say subserve their own purposes, because the people they pretend to benefit are injured—make the ears of the world ring again with the facts of this most odious species of oppression.

Speak through papers not in the begging interest, to the generous donors whose pockets are being relieved of gold, and whose generosity is thus abused by the horde of long-faced pretenders to piety and brotherly regard for the "poor colored man," who make incessant appeals to help this "mission" or the other "institution," without warrant in facts, and in direct opposition to the will of a people who would do as well for themselves, if "left alone," as the same classes to be found anywhere.

The Dawn.

The adjourned meeting at the Baptist Chapel was unusually harmonious. A committee of seven was appointed, instead of five, as at first proposed. Would it not be well to issue a Call for the contemplated Convention?

Negro Songs.

A correspondent, writing from Brantford, is justly incensed that a mistress in one of the public schools of that town should permit the children under her charge to sing Negro Songs. The national music, as it is styled in the States, may do there; but it is a disgrace to Canadians, and a direct insult to the colored tax-payers who help to support such schools. It is well understood that such music tends to reconcile Americans to the "institution" of slavery; and its introduction into the public schools in this country cannot have an elevating tendency. The introduction of the Bible into the public schools is a certain bone of discord, but Yankee Negro Songs excite no fears for the morals of the young. Where are the Christians of Brantford, or what is the quality of their religion?

The Protestant Alliance Association.

Last Wednesday evening, the Rev. Mr. Borland delivered a lecture in St. Lawrence Hall, by invitation of the Protestant Alliance Association, on the subject,—"Popery Antagonistic to True Christianity," to a very large and intelligent audience—the Hall being literally crowded to the very doors. The lecture was highly interesting, and delivered in a very mild and Christian-like manner; and the arguments brought forward by the reverened gentleman in support of his position, were very ably sustained throughout. We wish the advocates of Popery would come forward, in open discussion, and let us have the other side of the subject.

Mr. Larwill's Inquiry will not mislead any one. The old pot mender has no more regard for the colored people, alias his "baboons and monkeys," than when he made the first digraceful attack upon them.

From our Philadelphia Correspondent.

No. II.

Philadelphia, March 5th, 1855.

Dear Madam,—I am well aware that you are too personally familiar with the spirit and practice of caste, in the city of "Brotherly Love," to need any new revelation from my pen; but it may not be the case with your Canadian readers, as a general thing; consequently, I will give you, briefly, the latest specimen which has come under my notice.

Notwithstanding the change which has of late years been brought about by the Anti-Slavery movement, and the exertions of colored men themselves, prejudice is at this day, perhaps, much more malignant than what it is generally supposed to be. In our large cities, especially, its bulwarks are very strong. It has grown so thoroughly into the very foundations of all organized institutions, pecuniary, moral, social and religious, that without some extraordinary superhuman intervention it seems obvious that this generation, at least, will not be permitted to enjoy the "good time coming."

Within the last four years, the building lot "fever," like all other "fevers," has been claiming very largely the attention and patronage of the public.

To meet the wants of the labouring and mechanical classes, especially, indeed, now, all classes,—the colored man excepted—innumerable land, lot, and building associations have sprung up. To prove that these societies were indispensably necessary to the comforts of the masses, no pains have been spared. All phases of inconvenience, poverty, and hardship, growing out of city life, have been daily recounted in the various newspapers. In conjunction with this forlorn state of things, of course, may always be found the most plausible and persuasive reasoning to induce men to make early selections in securing "homesteads," with all their comforts, on reasonable terms. This matter was by no means to be thought lightly of nor delayed, especially when high rents and hard times were as pressing as at the present. Hence, not a few (the writer not excepted) have been induced to try their luck in "building lot associations." By these new enterprises, the white man will be largely benefited, but most shamefully will it be the reverse with the colored man. With rare exceptions, may be found in the constitutions of these associations, as in the constitution of nearly every State in the Union, these proscriptive words:—"Every White American Citizen," &c. Even this very day have I been made to feel most sensibly the humiliating effects of this abominable prejudice. Seeing in this morning's Public Ledger a number of building lots advertised (held by members of different land associations), and wishing to purchase, I made early applications—found the individuals willing, (wanted the money at any rate,) but "the law" stood in their way. One man to whom I applied seemed not to know the fact that the constitution of the company to which he belonged proscribed anybody on the score of complexion. The "hard times" had very much reduced him, and he was desirous of selling to me. He went home for his constitution, &c., on opening of which, I found in the 2nd article, I think, "Every white," &c., finished reading it, and returned it without any explanation, feeling that the owner had better be ignorant than wise in a case of that description. It is but just to state that one of the directors in one of the companies referred to, being well acquainted with me, assured me that he could get me "in," notwithstanding the fact that it would be contrary to their constitution, &c.; at the same time saying that "many colored had applied, but had been refused! Not feeling disposed to accept any terms other than on common and independent grounds, of course I did not accept at all. Thus we are compassed about with outrage, besetments and opposition on every hand. In view of these heart-harrowing grievances, I am free to confess that I am firmly of the conviction that thousands among us of our hard-working and enterprising men would find it greatly to their advantage, as well as to the interest of those with whom they are identified, to go to Canada. Its very productive soil, inexhaustible abundance of fine timber, with substantial railroads, whereby markets are made accessible, with equal rights, socially and politically, together with the rapid improvement of the country every way, doubtless offers advantages not be found in this gulf of prejudice and oppression.

Messrs. Stephen Smith, of this city, and Wm. Whipper, of Columbia, have just returned from Canada, having been on an exploring tour. With the prosperity of the country, its laws, &c., especially with the condition of the colored inhabitants, Mr. Smith seemed inexpressibly gratified at finding the state of the country so much further advanced than what he had anticipated. He said, if I am not mistaken, that he did not see a beggar in Canada! Mr Whipper, I have been informed, has decided to "pull up stakes" and move to Canada soon.

For the Provincial Freeman.

No. II.

Toronto, March 12, 1855.

Dear Madam,—My communication, which appeared in your paper of the 17th of March last, was merely intended to make way for a discussion of the important question and its concomitants, as to how or which way the colored people in these Provinces should cast the weight of their political influence, so as to make it tell the most effectively against the encroachments of the slave power, so as not to be made the political tools of their own destruction in these Provinces, as has been the case with our brethren in the United States. I therefore, after some little delay, purpose to follow up and discuss this matter. First, then, I propose to examine in some degree the two great political parties of these Provinces—their divisions, sub-divisions, together with their political tendencies, and how far these tendencies will operate to maintain our freedom, or to re-enslave us again. These are matters of vast importance, and should be examined with care, in order to arrive at a safe solution of them. For there are politicians among us, who seek the suffrages of the people, and ours among the rest, whose paramount object is to bring about annexation to the States. I shall make it my business, first, to endeavour to examine the two parties in the Canadas, and, secondly, with which of them do these gentry act, and their motives for so doing. Without going into a historical disquisition of the rise and progress of those parties, it will answer my purpose better to take them up in their order, and examine their present positions and tendencies. Then I begin with the "Tory" party. The signification of which, according to Walker, is "a friend to monarchy and the Church—a partisan opposed to a whig." The same definition is given in Johnson, after showing it to be a cant term, derived from an Irish word. They adhere to the time-honored institutions of the State, without much progress towards improvement thereon, which makes them very obnoxious to the Reformers, their opponents. The Conservative party is an offspring of the Tory. The term, according to Walker and Johnson, signifies "having the power of preserving, preservative." These two parties generally act together, and while the former is slow in its acts of reform, the latter, by its junction with the former, is enabled to carry out those safe measures of reform, (without that railroad speed which is calculated to sweep everything that is British in its course), and, as its name indicates, preserves British institutions. Whatever may be the internal tyranny of the Tory or Conservative parties, as is alleged by their opponents, unlike that of American republicanism, it bears no harder on one class than another on account of color. There is no action on the part of the Tory and Conservative parties to do away with British institutions and substitute in their stead Yankee republican institutions. All the leading men of talent and ability of those parties, are of sound British feeling and principles. Hence, there need be no fear of the introduction of republicanism from that quarter.

Provincial Parliament.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, April 5th.

Last night, after report left, the House went into Committee on the Militia Bill, and made several amendments thereto, to be reported on Tuesday, the 8th clause for the army and equipping the sedentary militia as infantry with Minie rifles, bayonets, and proper accoutrements; and the 32nd clause providing compensation for uniform, were expunged.

The Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again, and adjourned till Tuesday.

There was an animated debated in progress, blowing hot and cold in one breath, in which Mr. Brown, Dr. Rolph, Mr. Spence, Mr. McDonald, and Mr. Hincks, took part.

Mr. Larwill is to enquire of the Ministry whether it is the intention of the Government in organizing the militia, to form companies of colored people or negroes, and officer such companies by persons of their race. Also, whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint staff, field, or general officers, from Her Majesty's colored subjects or negroes in this Province, and if not—why not?

Also, what number of colored persons or negroes are holding Her Majesty's commissions in this Province, either in civil or military capacity; and also, whether it is the intention of the Government in the reorganization of the militia to make any distinction of color or race; or whether they will pursue the more harmonious course of one conglomerated whole.

Provincial.

Mr. Larwill's Singular Consistency.

From the Examiner.

The member of the Legislative Assembly for Kent suggested some time ago the propriety of offering to our American neighbors, as an equivalent for some advantages anticipated from Reciprocity, that we should agree to deliver up all Fugitives who might escape to Canada, from Southern Slavery. He wanted, in short, to have the principle of the abominable Fugitive Slave Law carried out practically in the Province, but, to the honor of the House, he could find no one to second the infamous proposal.

This same individual, when the Prohibitory Liquor Law was in debate last week, took occasion to tell the members that "he conceived the House degraded itself by imitating Yankee legislation!" He was quite willing that the House should imitate the "Yankees" in their vices, but not in their virtues:—he was willing that it should identify itself with the crime of stealing and selling men, women and children into slavery, with all its horrors, but he was not willing that it should attempt to dam out the flood of evils which the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks have spread over the face of society! Are those the sentiments of the electors of Kent?

In reply to the above, we answer emphatically, NO! The independent electors of the county of Kent are not so far devoid of shame or principle, to say nothing of justice, not to blush when they read the language made use of by the member for this County, towards the colored population on the debates on Reciprocity and the Maine Law. We would not disgrace our columns by transcribing the language made use of in discussing the matter referred to, in the above article. Every person possessed of the least spark of British feeling must have hung his head with shame when he read it, and though Mr. Larwill was brought to task and all but hooted down in the house for it, many members felt, as many of the electors of Kent do, that he is more an object of pity than rebuke.

When the subject of a Prohibitory Liquor Law was brought up a few days since, in the House of Assembly, Mr. Larwill being very desirous to show off his oratorical powers and to display his wit, indulged in the following, which will not the least astonish those who know the antecedents of this gentleman:—

"Mr Larwill followed in the same line of remarks as Mr. Turcotte. People generally, throughout the Province could not imagine for a moment that the gentleman who had introduced this bill drank wine himself. Yet he had drunk it frequently and abundantly in his (Mr. Larwill's) presence. (Laughter.) But because he introduced a bill of this sort the impression went abroad that the honourable member for Sherbrooke County must surely be a great philanthropist. The bill was altogether anti-British, and the great mass of the people were opposed to it. They would quite lose their character in England if the passed such a stupid bill as this to rob each other of their rights. It was well known that it could never be carried, and it was only brought up to please a parcel of old women and silly children. It was said that the measure had been largely petitioned for; but the reason of this was that pretty and amiable girls were always selected to carry round the petitions, and it was no wonder that they got a parcel of simple men and boys to sign them. They were told that 70,000 of the inhabitants had petitioned for it. But 80,000 of the inhabitants, through the most appropriate channel, their township and county councils, had petitioned this Parliament to prevent colored emigration, and their petition had received no attention. When, however, a set of girls ran round the country villages and got a parcel of people who could neither read nor write, to sign their names, then it was said that the whole Province was wanting the measure. The whole thing was humbug from beginning to end."

The friends of the prohibitory liquor law never expected much, if any, support from Mr. Larwill, but they had no reason to expect that they or their exertions in this noble cause would be turned into ridicule in the House of Parliament. We may inform Mr. Larwill and those who think with him, what they can be hardly ignorant of, that the subject of a Prohibitory Liquor Law has neither originated with "old women or silly children or pretty girls," though their influence is not to be despised, but with a large portion of the sober and thinking classes of the community. Men whose general intelligence will compare favorably with the member for Kent—men who are fully alive to the evils which the traffic in intoxicating liquor entails, and will continue to entail on the community unless it is speedily prohibited. We are warranted in assuming, indeed it is generally admitted that the great bulk of moral debasement and squalid wretchedness which is to be found in every town and city is directly chargeable on this traffic. Brighter days are in store for the friends of Temperance. The prohibitory question, we are happy to say is progressing with wonderful rapidity, carrying all before it, even the great and wise ones in Parliament, our member excepted, who soak over their champagne, will yet for the sake of popularity bow before the cold water shrine, and vote for a prohibitory liquor law, though our would be wise and witty member asserts is only advocated by "old women and silly boys." We think that the boy who could be guilty of making such a silly speech as the one we have above referred to would be severely chastised by his mamma, and no doubt Mr. Larwill will receive the same, should he ever be so foolish as to come before the electors for re-election; but he knew too much for that.

Mr. Larwill in his speech says that persons signed petitions for a prohibitory Liquor Law, who could neither read nor write—we have heard of persons who could whistle and chew meal, but we never heard of a person who could neither read nor write signing a petition—great man Mr. Larwill for making discoveries, we should not be astonished after this if he found out a plan to make a railway to the moon.

In order that the public may judge of Mr. Larwill's consistence in speaking and voting against the present prohibitory liquor law bill, we give the following resolution which was moved by this gentleman in 1853, when a member of the Town Council.

"It was moved by Mr. Larwill and seconded by Mr. Woods, "That after this date no more licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquor shall be issued by the municipality of Chatham; that parties who now have such licenses shall be allowed to sell such liquor under their present permits until the 1st of May next, after which, so far as respects taverns and saloons, the traffic shall cease within this municipality, and that the Clerk shall give immediate notice to the inhabitants of this municipality of this intent."

It will be seen by the above resolution that Mr. Larwill, in 1853, was either strongly in favor of a prohibitory liquor law, or was playing fast and loose with the inhabitants of Chatham. If it was right in 1853 for the Town Council to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, it is equally so for the highest legislative body in the province, notwithstanding all Mr. Larwill's "bunkum" about the bill being anti-British. It would be anti-British in Mr. Larwill's opinion to pass a Bill that would deprive him of his wine but it would not be anti-British to hand over the colored fugitive to the blood-hound slave-catcher. We trust that there are few men in Canada who entertain the same sentiment as held by Mr. Larwill on what is truly British and just. If Mr. Larwill cannot speak common sense when he is in the House, he had better remain silent, and not make himself the laughing-stock of the House and the Province.

THE ENLISTMENT OF RECRUITS IN THE U. S.—BOSTON, Saturday, March 31.—We are in receipt of papers from Halifax. N. S., and St. Johns, N. B., of late dates, The Legislative Council of Nova Scotia has refused to pass the Prohibitory Liquor Law, deferring its consideration until the next session.

The Halifax Journal contains official orders for providing rations for 500 recruits expected for the army in the Crimea. The same paper says, it is expected that 3,000 men will be obtained in the United States, who are to be kept at Halifax long enough to be drilled and disciplined.

A St. Johns paper says that the official hand-bills for the enlistment are signed by Lewis M. Wilkins, Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia, and the proceedings are understood to be connected with the visit of the Hon. Joseph Stowe to the United States, from which he has not yet returned.

United States.

THE KANSAS ELECTION—PRO-SLAVERY TICKET CHOSEN.—INDEPENDENCE, Mo., April 1.—We have returns from Kansas, showing the election of the pro-slavery ticket at Bull Creek, Lawrence, Douglas, Donephan, Tecumseth, Shawnee Mission, and Kookey Point, by majorities from 200 to 800. The elections were conducted with tolerable quietude. The editor of the Kansas Free State was ducked in Kew river, by a mob, on account of a speech delivered by him. Probably no anti-slavery men are elected to the Legislature. A large procession paraded here to celebrate the victory.

Just as we expected. Kansas will be a slave State, beyond a peradventure. The following paragraph shows what was the spirit that prevailed before the election:

"The election for Representatives comes off on the 30th inst., and from present appearances, it will be a sharp and bloody contest. Not a boat passes up the river, but at every landing this side of Kansas, the first question is asked, have you any emigrants on board, and where are they from?" For every man sent by the Aid Society, from the East, two will be sent from the towns along the river. They talk seriously of blockading the river, and not letting boats pass up, having Eastern men on board, 'we are bound to protect our rights, peaceably, if we can; forcibly, if we must; and I fear the election will not pass without scenes of bloodshed and murder."—Correspondent of the Kansas Journal.

THE EL DORADO OUTRAGE.—According to the "fact" and rumors of the letter writers, there is a great commotion in the Cabinet circle at Washington. The Spanish outrages on the El Dorado, and upon our vice-consul at Sagua la Grande, have aroused the mettle of the Administration. Orders have been sent to our home naval stations to have all available vessels and materials prepared for immediate service, and instructions have been issued to all naval officers at those points to hold themselves in readiness for sea.—Life Illustrated.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16*TH VIC. CAP.* 85. DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints, Spices, Nuts, Vermiceli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,
DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

JOHN E. FORCE,
Publisher and Proprietor.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing clues on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact 2nd To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. currency.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specfic object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8	do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13	do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20	do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

Let not a coward spirit crave
Escape from tasks allotted!
Thankful for toil and danger be;
Duty's high call will makes thee flee
The vicious—the besotted.

Think not thy share of strife too great;
Speed to thy post, erect, elate:
Strength from above is given
To those who combat sin and wrong,
Nor ask how much, nor count how long
They with the foe have striven.

Wage ceaseless war 'gainst lawless might;
Speak out the truth—act out the right—
Shield the defenceless.
Be firm—be strong—improve the time—
Pity the sinner—but for crime,
Crush it—relentless!

Strive on, strive on, nor ever deem Thy work complete. Care not to seem,
But be, a Christian true.
Think, speak and act 'gainst mean device;
Wrestle with those who sacrifice
The many to the few.

Forget thyself, but bear in mind
The claims of suffering human kind:
So shall the welcome night,
Unseen, o'ertake thee, and thy soul,
Sinking in slumber at the goal,
Wake in eternal light!

HINTS TO EMIGRANTS.

A Letter to Working People who propose going West.

BY A CO-WORKER.

PART SECOND.

Should you go West, no doubt you would have domestic animals around you, but keep as few as possible, and keep an equal number of each sex, two and two, as God or nature made them, and evidently designed they should remain so; for in any way interfering with this law, produces discord and disease. See the terrible fightings and diseases among horned cattle, horses, dogs, cats, and even fowls. Hydrophobia, too, that most terrible of all diseases, is, no doubt, caused by this very interference with animal instinct. We are very much shocked at the idea of the unnatural, abominable, and pernicious practice of polygamy, when applied to human beings, and well we might be; then in mercy's name, do not let us force it upon poor brutes; for like causes produce like effects; and we can not violate a single law of nature and escape the penalty attached to it. And whatever number of animals you have, see that they are well supplied with their natural food, particularly in winter, for singular as it may seem, I have seen a hundred-fold more starvation on the praries of the West than I ever did East or anywhere else, as incredible as it may seem, right where any amount of hay could have been cut from June till October, for nothing. Do you ask why this is so? It arises partly from what I have before stated—trying to do too much—and from various other causes: one is the long pleasant falls. Persons that have been in the country but a short time think the winter will be short, and the spring open early; but as a general rule, you must supply an abundance of food for your stock till the first of May. I know there is a great deal of pleasant weather through the winter, but the frost has killed every green thing, which makes it necessary to feed your cattle regularly. I was on the point of saying another reason why there was so much starvation and suffering among brutes, was the shiftlessness on the part of their owners; but I fear I should give a wrong impression, as you know a more wide-awake, stirring set of people than those who go West, are difficult to find. Still it must be admitted, that a great deal of time is spent to but little account, in hunting wild game, hunting for horses, cows, hogs, borrowing waggons, teams, farming implements, &c., &c. This one item of stock-hunting (horses, oxen, and cows) consumes a great amount of time, where they are permitted to roam free, over the prairies and through the forests, and I do think it a matter of economy that all who keep such animals should have a pasture for them or keep them up; and generally, too, they are great annoyance, by breaking into fields in the fall, destroying grain, &c. And it does look somewhat like injustice to allow any stock to run at large. It is self-evident that every man should keep his own brutes on his own dominions. It certainly can not be right that you, a poor man, owning but a small place, and not being able, or willing (from principle) to keep brutes, should be compelled to build strong fences to keep those of your neighbor's from running over and destroying your crops.

In building your house, see that you have south and north openings, especially the former, as, in the very hottest weather, all the breeze we get is from a southerly direction; and if your rooms have only east and west openings, you will sometimes find them insufferable on account of heat. And unless your location is such that you can easily dig a drain, have no cellar under your house. I don't know that cellars are particularly unhealthy if dry, and kept in order, but where you can not have them so, you had better dispense with them, as you can make top ground cellars that will answer all purposes

I would again urge upon the consideration of persons going West the importance of settling permanently on one spot, as I have seen and experienced so fully the evil of change. I am well aware of many of the reasons why homes and business are changed so often in the West; but let me tell you that from an experience of some twenty years there, (and about as many moves,) that those persons who have lived the most uniform life at one place, are the healthiest, wealthiest, and probably the happiest people there. A few years' residence on one place, (if one's own,) with a reasonable amount of industry and economy, will build up a nice little home, with a great variety of comforts and conveniences that are not generally obtained in any other way, such as fruit, flowers, shrubbery, yards and walks; a nice little house, just as you want it; a good large cistern of pure rain water, just at your back door with a good tight curb to it. When the earth is tolerably dry, and not so sandy as to cave in while digging, you can plaster with cement right on to it; but in the first place, you should arch over the top with good hard brick, leaving a central opening large enough to go in, of course; you should have the earth one or two feet thick over the top, so as to keep cool, in summer, and away from frost in winter. Put your square spout down as slanting as you can through the side of your curb, and in that spout, before it enters the curb, a sliding gate, or cut-off, with a hole just above it, so that you can turn the water off until your roof and gutters are well washed, or, when your cistern is full; and then to keep out all vermin and insects. By thus constructing your cistern, and washing it out occasionally, a good, tight, well-fitting curb and cover, with simply a rope and clean bucket to draw with, you can have the best and handiest water that can be got with so little trouble and expense. Pump and filterers are not necessary. Still, where you can get good soft water in abundance, by digging twenty-five or thirty feet, you might dispense with a cistern; but on no other conditions would I do it, had I means to construct one.

I must once more caution you in regard to the prevention of sickness, for in prevention is your only safety. I shall not lie to you by telling you that such and such medicines will cure such and such diseases, for rest assured that there is nothing but nature can cure, and if you have not violated her laws beyond a certain point, listen to and follow her instinctive calls, and you will recover without medicine; but if beyond this point you have passed, all the medicine in the world can not save you. They may sometimes mitigate your sufferings; but even that is questionable; I know they not unfrequently add to them. Let your food be fruit and vegetable, to the extent that nature demands, uncompounded and uncooked if preferred, the better; but if you must use flesh, let it be the flesh of unrestrained animals—those that are wild, and procure their food independent of man. Work enough to produce what you consume, unless you choose to live upon the spontaneous fruits of the earth. Clothe yourself just sufficiently to keep comfortable. Bathe enough to satisfy nature, and keep clean all over. If in the unnatural habit of using tea, coffee, tobacco, or liquor, abandon it by degrees, or, to use a common expression, "taper off," which you can most surely do if you will live as I have recommended. You know that these appetites are all acquired, and that when you first commenced this downhill course, they were most of them disagreeable, and some of them really disgusting and sickening, and that it was a long time before you could use them to the extent you now do; but this you have now attained by a regular progression. So then, just reverse this course, and progress back to your purer life. Do you say you can't and don't want to do it? Then I beg your pardon, you are not the one I am addressing.

I am aware that there are hundreds and thousands in and around the towns and cities now that would rejoice to secure that little home, but they have not the means to get it, and then get to it. I understand your condition very well: I know that flour is sixpence a pound, and every thing else in proportion; that coal is high and rent higher; but if you can possibly live and pay these prices, you must be earning something. Now for the sake of getting the only spot on God's earth where you can be independent, see if you cannot economize a little; and in the first place lay aside all superfluities, especially in dress. Can not many if not most of you, save nearly one-half in your clothing, and think just as well of yourselves? No matter what others think; a person who thinks well of himself pleases the most important personage he has any thing to do with. I would willingly take the job of clothing the working people of New York at one-half of what it now costs, I think, and do it just as comfortably. Then, in the matter of food, if a thousand of you would club together, and buy at wholesale, you would save some twenty-five cents on the dollar, I suppose, as all these retailers are supported by you. But you say we must have fresh meat and milk. My friends, I do better without them, or just as well, I am sure; for we have not used a pound of fresh meat through the summer, in my family, I believe, and none of us have had either cholera, or dysentery, or fever.

It would cost so much to get out West. Not so very much,—if you would go in the second-class cars, which you can do very comfortably and pleasantly, by so many of you going together as to fill up one car; and no doubt, any railroad company would give you a comfortable clean one, if you would fill it with passengers; and by going in company, you could save in many ways, such as moving baggage, procuring food, &c., and then by locating together, much might be saved in fencing, and money might in a great measure be dispensed with, which, if the love of it is the "root of all evil," it is one of the roots you had better not transplant in a new country and a new home. Were I personally acquainted with you, no doubt you would ask me if I thought it would be for your interest to go West? and whether I thought you would like it? Now the answering these questions is pretty difficult; but I will try and do it, by telling you what kind of persons I think are adapted to that country, and what are not. In the first place, those who are fond of farming on a large scale—who like to see the whole country covered with fields of grain and grass, who are fond of having or seeing great herds of cattle and hogs, and who desire to get up in the world in this way—get rich. Then there is another class who should go—"whose God is their belly"—whose Heaven consists in having animal food, abundant and cheap; and another class who, by constant and unremitting toil, can but just live;—those that have no home, renters, hirelings, &c. I have supposed that these three classes have but little ideality—a good comfortable home, with plenty to eat, being their chief end and aim.

There are a few persons who are not calculated for the West, and who would not be satisfied if they were to go there; they are of that class who have lived a quiet rural life—who have not been compelled to bow to toil like a beast of burden; who think much of their home, especially if that home is beautified by mountains, hills, dashing water-falls, and a great variety of fruit, and evergreen trees and shrubbery; whose health is good, and who have no great ambition to accumulate property or money, and who have great fondness for variegated and romantic scenery.

To those persons who have a little home, where they can produce all, or most of their food, and are making a living with a fair amount of labor, are healthy, and tolerably contented—I would say stay where you are; "let well enough alone," as in going to a new country you must encounter a thousand little evils, which you would otherwise escape; and in all probability you would not escape sickness, though you might not be very sick; still I must tell you that it would be remarkable if, in the course of a few years, you did not have a bilious attack, or a "slight brush of the ague." But if you are poor, and compelled to work for others, and desire a little more independence; somewhat ambitious—wishing to be your own master—and desire a good, fine farm, and have no great attachment to your eastern home, and are willing to encounter manfully the labors and trials incident to a new home in a new country—I would say go; there is no doubt but you will do well, especially if you will heed and follow the advice I have given you.

In a short time there will be an immense territory of the finest farming land opened in various sections of the West by railroads, that has hitherto been thought to possess but little value on account of the scarcity of wood, distance from market, &c. I would advise those going West to look for locations along those roads far out in the open prairie, as your prospect for health would be better than in the woods, or along the banks of creeks or rivers.

Should you wish to settle near the Mississippi River, or stop awhile and look around, you would find a good point for observation at Rock Island, and another at Keokuk. From the latter place you could conveniently examine a portion of three States, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri.

There may be hundreds of just as favorable points as the above, but being best acquainted with them, I should naturally call your attention to them, and can confidently say that I know of no better places, or where I would as soon settle in the West, as somewhere in their vicinity.

In this letter I have endeavored to give you the information I have got by experience; and though you may think but little of it now, should you go West, just take it along, as it is possible you might wish to look at it hereafter, as our opinions and views of things sometimes change.

In conclusion, I would say this is not written for criticism; but is merely a letter of a laboring man, and is designed only for such; and if understood, it is all the writer expects.

The Sin and Folly of Scolding.

"Fret not thyself to do evil."—Psalm xxxvii: 2.

1. It is a Sin against God.—It is an evil and only evil, and that continually. David understood both human nature and the law of God. He says, "Fret not thyself in any wise to do evil." That is, never fret or scold, for it is always a sin. If you cannot speak without fretting or scolding, keep silence.

2. It destroys Affection.—No one ever did, ever can, or ever will love an habitual fretter, fault-finder, or scolder. Husbands, wives, children, relatives or domestics, have no affection for peevish, fretful fault-finders. Few tears are shed over the graves of such. Persons of high moral principles may tolerate them—may bear with them. But they cannot love them more than the sting of nettles, or the noise of mosquitoes. Many a man has deen driven to the tavern, and to dissipation, by a peevish fretful wife. Many a wife has been made miserable by a peevish, fretful husband.

3. It is the Bane of Domestic Happiness.—A fretful, peevish, complaining fault-finder in a family is like the continual chafing of an inflamed sore. Woe to the man, woman or child, who is exposed to the influence of such a temper in another. Nine-tenths of all the domestic trials and unhappiness spring from this source. Mrs. A. is of this temperament. She wonders her husband is not more fond of her company; that her children give her so much trouble; that domestics do not like to work for her; that she cannot secure the good-will of young people. The truth is, she is peevish and fretful. Children fear her, and do not love her. She never gained the affections of a young person, nor ever will, till she leaves off fretting.

4. It Defeats the end of Family Government.—Good family government is the blending of authority with affection, so as to secure respect and love. Indeed, it is the great secret of managing young people. Now, your fretters may inspire fear, but they always make two faults where they correct one. Scolding at a child, fretting at a child, sneering at a child, taunting a child, treating a child as though it had no feelings, inspires dread and dislike, and fosters those very dispositions from which many of the faults of childhood proceed. Mr. G. and Mrs. F. are of this class. Their children are made to mind; but why? Mrs. F. frets and scolds her children; she is severe enough upon their faults; she seems to watch them in order to find faults: she sneers at them; treats them as though they had no feelings; she seldom gives them a command without a threat and a long running fault-finding commentary; when she chides it is not done in a dignified manner; she raises her voice, puts on a cross look, threatens, strikes them, pinches their ears, slaps their heads, &c. The children cry, pout, sulk, and poor Mrs. F. has to do her work over pretty often. Then she will find fault with her husband because he does not fall in with her ways, or in chime with her as chorus.

5. Fretting and Scolding makes Hypocrites.—As a fretter never receives confidence and affection, so no one likes to tell them anything disagreeable, and thus procure for themselves a fretting. Now, children conceal as much as they can from such persons; they cannot make up their minds to be frank and open-hearted. So husbands conceal from their wives, and wives from their husbands. For a man may brave a lion, but he likes not to come in contact with nettles and mosquitoes.

6. It Destroys one's Peace of Mind.—The more one frets the more he may. A fretter will always have enough to fret at, especially if he or she have the bump or order largely developed. Something will always be out of place; there will always be some dirt somewhere. Others will not eat right, look right, talk right. And fretters are generally so selfish as to have no regard for any one's comfort but their own.

7. It is a Mark of a Vulgar Disposition.—Some persons have so much gall in their dispositions, are so selfish, that they have no regard to the feelings of others. All things must be done to please them; they make their husbands, wives, children, domestics, the conductors by which their spleen and ill-nature are discharged. Woe to the children who are exposed to such influences. It makes them callous and unfeeling, and when they grow up they pursue the same course with their own children, or those entrusted to their management, and thus the race of fretters is perpetuated. Any person who is in the habit of fretting or sneering, taunting their husbands, wives, children, or domestics, shows either a bad disposition or else ill-breeding. For it is generally your low-bred people that are guilty of such things.

Condition of Canada, as compared with the United States, &c.

We give the concluding Extracts from the valuable Report of Mr. Wm. Hutton, in the last Census Return of Canada, volume the first.

It may, however, fairly be observed that Ohio exceeds the average of the whole United States, in the amount of butter per cow, 27 per cent., and in the amount of cheese, 133 per cent.; Upper Canada exceeds the average of the whole Union by about 9 per cent. in butter, but is very deficient in Cheese. The difference in the value of the yield of one cow in Upper Canada and Ohio, calculating the price of butter at 7½d. per lb., and the cheese at 5d., in both places, would be 16s. 10½d. in favour of Ohio, and the extra milk and whey would make 20s, supposing the returns to be correct, which there is no good reason for doubting. As a proof, however, if proof were necessary, that the climate of Ohio is much less severe than that of Canada, it may be stated that although she has ½ more horses, viz: 78,020—about 63,000 more young cattle, and 2⅓ millions more sheep, she produces less hay by 204,293 tons, and very much less straw and other fodder, even allowing that she has 29 times more corn stalks.

The increase in the production of the articles of butter and cheese in Canada, has notwithstanding been enormous, and we find that within the three years, 1849, 1850 and 1851, the amount of butter produced has, in the Upper Province, increased 372 per cent., and that of cheese during the same period, 233 per cent., which leads to the inference, that our milch cows are rapidly improving in quality. The Census Returns of the Lower Province, previous to the year 1851, are very deficient as to the amount of these articles.

The next most important feature in the difference between Ohio and Canada, is the number of their sheep, and the consequent value of their wool. Here, too, the amazing difference is difficult to be accounted for, but the fact should open the eyes of the Canadian farmers to their interest.

The number of sheep in Canada, in round numbers, is 1,600,000, in Ohio 4,000,000, although the number of acres occupied is very nearly the same, and the number of acres cultivated only about one-third greater than in our Provinces. In the value of wool alone the annual difference in favour of the former is £606,564
And in sheep at 7s. 6d. each it is 879,405

the latter item, being capital, which, deducting the expense of keep, &c., pays at least 33 per cent. per annum, net profit, and allowing for increase in numbers every year, might fairly be calculated at fifty per cent.

It must, however, be observed; that notwithstanding the striking superiority of Ohio in this particular, the rate of increase in the number of sheep, as compared with that in the United States, would appear, from page 67 of Mr. Kennedy's Report, to be greatly in favour of Canada, for in ten years the increase in the States has been only 10 per cent., and in the weight of the fleece only 32 per cent., whereas in Canada the increase in wool has, in nine years, been 64 per cent., and that of sheep 35 per cent., showing an improvement in the weight of the fleece of not far off 30 per cent.

The average weight in Canada is found to be:

In Upper Canada..... 2¼ lbs.
In Lower Canada..... 2 7/16 "
In all Canada..... 2 1/16 "

whilst in the United States it is, as per page 67 of the Abstract, 2 1/16 or 2 3/16 lbs., shewing an excess in favour of Canada in the average of nearly 3 oz. per fleece. The proportion too in both countries, i. e., the whole United States and Canada, is about the same, being about 9 sheep to every 10 inhabitants. Upper Canada has about ten sheep to every 100 acres occupied; Lower Canada has 8, and the United States has 7 17/100.

With regard to horses, there are in both Canadas, according to the Census Returns 385,377, or very nearly one to every five inhabitants, and they have increased during the last nine years 48 per cent. In some counties the increase has been very much greater than this, for we find in Oxford an increase of 350 per cent., and in some townships in that county even 400 per cent, this would induce a belief that there was some great error in the Returns of 1842, and there seems to be no good reason why the number of horses should not have kept pace with the population; the wealth of the latter having also, during that time so materially increased. If in 9 or 10 years, the population has increased cent. per cent. it is almost unaccountable that the number of horses should not have increased in a similar ratio.

It is stated by the Census Superintendent, that in the United States, where Railways have been extensively constructed, the number of horses has been very much decreased, and according to the Abstract accompanying his last Report, the number in New York has decreased, by 26,566; in Pennsylvania by 13,000; in New England by 77,000, or more than 25 per cent., "while in all the States" (he remarks) "Railroad conveyance has almost superseded the use of horses for travelling purposes along main routes." He adds, "we would more readily attribute the apparent diminution to the omission to enumerate the horses in cities and towns than to any superseding of horse power."

There can be no doubt that this must be the reason for any apparent decrease, for the experience of other countries shews a very different effect, as produced by Railway travelling.

In Great Britain, the number of horses employed at the Great Railway Termini, and the numerous intermediate stations, very far exceeds the number formerly employed in the Stage and Posting Departments The facilities afforded by Railway communication, and the saving of time, combined with so much greater comfort, has led to an enormous increase of travellers, and the tens who formerly travelled between the chief cities and towns of a country, either on business or for pleasure, are now multiplied to hundreds. The main routes may be comparatively deserted, but it is difficult to believe that the construction of Railways, which must be fed at every point with their freights, living as well as dead, can have any other effect than an increase in the employment of horses.

The horse and mules of the whole Union constitute a proportion of 1 to 5 of the inhabitants. New York has only 1 to 7; Pennsylvania 1 to 6 7/10; and Ohio has 1 to 4 3/10 In the new States of the West, the increase in horses has kept pace with that of the population, and so also in Canada West the new townships shew a far greater increase than the older ones.

From this kind of comparison it will be seen that there are various branches of Agriculture well deserving of the increased attention of the Canadian farmer.

Ohio far exceeds Canada in Indian corn, butter and cheese, grass seed, wool, tobacco, and beef and pork.

Canada far exceeds Ohio in wheat, peas, rye, barley, oats, buckwheat, hay, hemp and flax, hops, maple sugar and potatoes; and also considering that Ohio has one-third more cultivated land, in total value of live stock. This bears a proportion of only 12¾ to 11, whilst the cultivated land in Ohio to that of Canada is as 10 to 7½.

In all the above enumerated articles, viz: live stock, grain, other farm produce, articles manufactured from flax, hemp and wool, beef and pork, Ohio exceeds Canada by £8,199,310, being very little over ⅓ more than the produce of Canada, and if the produce of the Forest be calculated, of which Canada exported in 1851, value for upwards of one million and a half of pounds, the relative wealth per acre would be in favour of Canada.

The ratio of increase of population in Ohio for 10 years, from 1840 to 1850, is 33 3/10 per cent.—that of Upper Canada, in the same period, has been 104 5/10 per cent.—that of Lower Canada for 7 years, from 1844 to 1851, has been 20 per cent.

When it is considered that there are 31 States, 1 District and 4 Territories, and that Ohio has 8 per cent. of the whole population of the Union,—8¾ per cent. of the grain of the whole Union except Rice,—and about 10½ per cent. of all other agricultural produce not manufactured, and 7 per cent. of butter, cheese, beef, pork and domestic manufactures of the whole Union, and that Canada equals Ohio in arcable produce, is there not good reason for expecting that Canada, with her more extended scope, and her more rapidly increasing population, will, in a very few years, make a much nearer approximation to the produce of the whole Union than Ohio does now.

As a summary of the inferences which may be drawn from this comparison between Ohio and the United States and Canada, and they are both numerous and important, the following brief remarks embrace those perhaps most worthy of notice:

1st. Canada should attend to the improvement of the breed of milch cows: the value of butter and cheese produced in Ohio from 47,000 fewer cows, and calculated at the same price in both places, being about 70 per cent. more than in Canada.

2nd. Canada should make more cheese. Ohio produces 760 per cent. more than Canada, and 28 per cent. more butter. Canada depends too much on foreign countries for her supply of cheese, and the demand for American cheese in Canada causes its production in such large quantities in Ohio. At present cheese is much the more profitable of the dairy produce. The value of cheese in Ohio, at 5d. per lb., is £433,740, against £57,037, the value of cheese in Canada at the same price—making a difference in favour of Ohio of £376, 703.

3rd. Canada should grow more clover and grass seed for which her climate is quite as well adapted as Ohio. Of these two articles, the later grows 130 per cent. more than Canada, making a difference of £80,000 against Canada, always bearing in mind that the cultivated land of Ohio is 33 per cent. more than that of Canada. The farmer should not be under the necessity of purchasing clover seed—the very purchase makes him sparing, and a field of wheat or barley should not be sown without seeding it down with 10 or 12 lbs. of red clover per acre. It is a fact equally consistent with practical experience and theoretical science that other things being equal, the acreable produce of wheat, barley and oats will be in proportion to the amount of clover seed grown and ploughed under, or consumed by stock on the farm. In regard to the other suggested improvements there may be some arguments against them on the score of climate, but in this no such can apply, for the climate of Canada is quite as good for the production of clover and grass seeds as that of Ohio. Frosts do not injure the seed and it may therefore be allowed to remain in the field late in the fall. A more extended growth of these articles would ensure an increased extent and richness of pasture, and would add to the quantities of butter and cheese.

4th Canada should keep more Sheep—the value of sheep and wool being both 40 per cent. higher in Ohio than in Canada, though the quality of sheep and weight of fleece is rather better in the latter, and the cultivated land of Ohio only 33⅓ per cent. more than in Canada.

In value of sheep, Ohio exceeds
Canada,..... £879,405
In value of wool..... 606,564
£1,485,969

5th. Canada should grow more Indian Corn. Ohio produces 2800 per cent. more than Canada, although the difference in the climate in the Upper Province does not warrant anything like so great a difference. The average acreable value is not quite so great as that of Wheat—the average crop of Wheat, sixteen bushels at 4s. is £3 4s., and 24 bushels of Indian Corn at 2s. 6d. is £3; but it should be remembered that wheat occupies the land two years and Indian Corn one, and requires more outlay for seed and labour than Indian Corn; and an acre of corn-stalks is more valuable than an acre of straw, and the condition of the land after corn is much better than after wheat

Taking all these matters into consideration, one acre of Indian Corn is as profitable as two acres of wheat where the climate is suitable for the growth of both.

6th. Canada should have fewer acres under wheat as well as more under Corn. There is too large a proportion of the land in Upper Canada under Wheat, nearly one fifth of the whole cultivated land, say 1/5.

In Ohio there is said to be only ⅛th of the cultivated land under wheat, but that is much to be doubted, as taking it at that, it gives only 12 bushels average per acre. It is very probable there is not more than 1/10 under wheat; this would leave the average 15 bushels per acre—the acres under different crops are not given in the U. S. Census. The wheat crop of Canada is nearly ⅛, say 7/8 of that of the whole United States and Territories. It is very doubtful whether she can maintain this proportion for many years without diminishing her acreable produce, unless the new clearances be very extensive.

7th. Canada might grow more tobacco. Ohio produces 850 per cent. more than Canada—and a large portion of Upper Canada is well calculated for its growth. In this article alone Ohio has £230,000 worth more than Canada.

Already the population of Canada is more than 1/7 of the Union—the area in square miles, exclusive of the territories, is one-sixth, and of course in acres the same—in occupied acres about 1/7—in growth of wheat very nearly one-sixth of the whole Union—in barley more than one-fourth; in oats one-seventh, in buck wheat one-eighth; in all grain, including Indian corn, about $\frac{1}{7}$—exclusive of Indian corn, about one-sixth; of rice Canada has none, neither has Ohio; the whole Union produces 215,312,710 lbs., which at three pence per pound would be £2,691,408 in favour of the Union.

Even at present Canada compares most favourably in proportion to her population with the States, and when the railroads now in course of formation shall have united the whole British possessions in North America, the increased facilities and aroused and invigorated energies, and improving climate and more rapidly increasing population, and interminable water communication, and extensive fisheries, will, in a few years, enable the British North American possessions to make no unfavourable comparison with the Union, flourish as she may.

The whole area of the United States and territories is 3,230,572 square miles, which multiplied by 640, gives the number of acres 2,057,566,080, certainly a prodigious territory, but the British possessions in North America far exceed this.

The exact amount according to Allison is 4,109,630 square geographical miles, and the water in British America is 1,340,000 square miles—the whole terrestrial globe embrace about 37,000,000 square miles, so that British America contains nearly a ninth part of the whole terrestrial surface of the Globe—the number of acres is 2,630,163,200. Allison remarks that a very large portion is perhaps doomed to everlasting sterriity, owing to the severity of the climate—such is no doubt the case, but it should be recollected that as the country becomes cleared up, the climate improves, and that there are at present twenty or thirty millions of acres, to the successful cultivation of which the climate presents no insuperable barrier.

Two or three centuries ago, the Rhine used to be frozen, and the animals, the natives of the Northern regions, were abundant on its banks—how different is the case now. It will be so in British North America, with this difference, that the improving climate will keep pace with the vastly accelerated movements and more rapidly increasing numbers of the New World settlers.

The means that are taken by Government to promote immigration, and improve the Agriculture of the country, will stimulate progression to an indefinite degree. The formation of a Bureau of Agriculture is an important feature in the history of Canada, and the most important results may be expected from its labours. In industry and perseverance the Canadian farmer stands perhaps unrivalled, and it rests with those who have the power to assist him by the diffusion of that kind of knowledge which, unaided, he has no means of acquiring. The time has happily passed when a perseverance in old habits and prejudices was thought to be a virtue—let the results of science and the experience of our own and other countries, be placed within the reach of our industrial population, and a blessing will result to the individual and the country, with a certainty and speed unattainable without this aid, &c. &c.—Old Countryman.

The Russian Forces.

A letter from the Crimea, of the 12th says:—the Russians forces are said to be distributed as follows:—At Perekop is encamped the corps of dragoons, a division of light cavalry, and various other detachments, amounting in all to 20,000 men, under the command of General Pawloff I. At Simpheropol there are about 45,000 men commanded by General Read. Near the Belbec, General Osten-Sacken's head-quarters have been placed, with 50,000 men, including the garrison of Sebastopol.

On the Tchernaya is encamped General Liprandi, with 18 000 men, and in the valley of Baidar is General Wagner, with 9,000 men. It appears that the first operation which General Osten-Sacken had executed, on his appointment to the chief command, was to have the heights along the coast occupied and fortified from Karabelnaya to the mouth of the Tchernaya. The heights on the left bank of the Alma have also been fortified, and this defensive system seems to show that not only in Baktchiserai the centre of the General's operations, but that a greater importance is attached to the communications of Baktchiserai with Sebastopol and with Arabat, than to those of that town with Perekop. The Russians, in fact, seems determined to defend to the last extremity the basin of the Salzir as well as the ground extending from Simpheropol to Kaffa, their intention being, to all appearance, to procure their provisions and stores from the side of Anapa, and their reinforcements from Perekop. Should the Allies think fit to enter into operations not immediately in the neighbourhood of Sebastopol, it is not improbable that they will act against Baktchiserai, the centre of the Russian positions.

The Committee of Inquiry.

The Committe of Inquiry holds on its way with laudable diligence, and the spirit in which it has hitherto conducted its labours is satisfactory. Nothing has been uttered which can justly offend the EMPEROR of the FRENCH, or that does not reflect credit on his forces in the East. Like everything else seen through a mist, the Committee presented a huge deformity, exhibiting hoof and horn sufficient for deadly execution on all sides. But, as the monster has been approached, its apparent dimensions and capabilities for mischief have been greatly diminished. Neither the anticipated good, nor the dreaded evil will be realised. Upon the whole, there has not been much that is unrevealed,—of revelation, properly speaking, there has been very little. Facts previously alleged have been sifted, explained, and established; and many holes and corners have been lighted up, which must otherwise have remained unvisited by the public eye; but all the great leading points, facts, and circumstances were previously known. So far as the late Government is concerned, it bids fair to be a decided gainer by the inquiry. Very little, indeed, has been elicited at variance with the claims of zeal, integrity, and industry put in on behalf of Lord ABERDEEN and his colleagues. But little has yet appeared for which they, as individuals, have reason to blush. The manifold and undeniable evils which have prevailed in the East, have been the result of the defective system, irrational "routine," heartless stupidity, selfishness, or incapacity. One thing is clear: a nation that has effected a great reduction in its armies should beware of hastily proclaiming hostilities against a Power which lives only to cultivate military science, whose spirit is proudly martial, and whose people, to a man, may, at an hour's warning, be turned by the million into soldiers. Bad, miserably bad, as things have been with us, had the projects of Mr. Cobden been realised, we should have been in still worse circumstances. Mr. Cobden's views were, indeed the right ones, had the world been prepared for them; but it was not so. The madness of mankind continues. War, with all its waste, and all its woe rages. Peaceful nations must repel the aggressor, or be robbed, ruined, and trampled in the dust!—British Banner.

IMMENSE INUNDATION OF THE RHINE—SEVENTY VILLAGES SUBMERGED.—Rotterdam, March, 7.—Accounts from the provinces of Guelderland and North Brabant, state that in consequence of the driving ice of the rivers having fixed itself in various points into barricades, a vast quantity of territory lies now entirely under water. As many as seventy villages are submerged. At Arnheim, enormous dams have been constructed in all haste, to prevent the entire town being submerged. The Rhenish Railway, will, it is apprehended, become impassable. In the village of Veenendaal the water covers the tops of the houses, most of which will be left undermined and in ruins. In most places, however, the water has simply overflowed the dams, which have hitherto resisted the pressure of the accumulated waters. In those districts, should the damage continue to be so limited, the consequences will be but temporary, but in some cases the dams are broken, and the water has burst into the adjoining lands with a fatal and irresistible power,

In one instance, in a village near Dusseldorf, the inhabitants had not the time to effect their escape, before the waters dashed in, sweeping all before them, many poor creatures were drowned, though not so many happily, as under the circumstances might have been expected. To those who escaped, the only place of safety was in the highest stories of their dwelings; and many instances occurred of people being obliged to seek safety on the roofs of their cottages, whither no assistance could be conveyed to them in consequence of the enormous masses of ice dashing about on the surface of the encroaching waters. The village of Veenendaal has suffered severely;—the inhabitants have left—i. e. have been driven from—their home en masse, and may be seen bringing with them their children, their furniture, and what provisions they could save, seeking shelter in the neighboring villages.

In North Brabant the flood is not so general, but it has broken down the dykes, so that the damage caused will prove of a fearful character. Several bridges have been carried away, and the town of Bois-le duc is a diminutive island amidst a waste of water and ice. The surrounding villages are deserted, but when the dykes are repaired they will again, for the most part, be habitable. In one village, however, twenty houses were at once swept away by the flood, and seven of their occupants were drowned. It is 144 years ago since Holland was before visited with a similarly destructive flood.

Gaines' last Letter on "en masse" Emigration.

The interest expressed in the Emigration question has determined the brief review we here give, and which we may continue next week, of Mr. Gaines' last letter against en masse emigration. The letter in question would have received earlier attention, had not a press of duties made it impossible. In attempting the slightest examination possible, and yet, the most extended under the circumstances, it cannot be supposed that a defence of the en masse theory will be given, other than incidentally, as "Gaines," by avoiding the issue, has left nothing for us to defend. Neither can we be expected to wade through "Shakspeare and the Ancients," to present to our readers a conglomeration, equalled only by Sue's nondescript dish, as a proof of our position, when the contradictory positions taken by Gaines, himself, furnish material for the refutation needed.

The first point made is, that the Fugitive Slave Law is a blessing.

If the law in question has been ignored by the people, if the anti-slavery sentiment of the North is strong enough to make it void, why is it necessary for fugitives to proceed to Canada, or why does not the anti-slavery feeling protect them? If every one who voted for the repeal of the Missouri Compromise were doomed to remain at home after the next election, that fact would furnish no evidence of an anti-slavery sentiment in this case. The rights of white men had been invaded; a solemn compact entered into with white Americans had been broken; the people when opposing its operation, only attempted to shew their sense of the injustice done them. Mr. Gaines knows full well that the strongest Anti-Nebraska advocates are those who, like Horace Greely, "want no more ebony editions, no more black republics;" those who say, give them "the whole of the West Indies," if you please, but at all events, get them off the continent; that is the kind of Anti-Slavery sentiment which has been called forth,—a kind which has always existed,—that which defends the colored man, incidentally, if at all, when the rights of white men are invaded; the kind which assumed renewed activity by the passage of the Fugitive Slave law. Who will say that the people of the North were not cognizant of the fact, that the system of slavery, as carried on at the South, is more injurious in its effects than the Fugitive law? Is the prospective rendition to slavery of persons, with a trial by jury, more horrifying, more wicked than that of keeping millions in such a state? Are the proceedings of the United States Commissioners any more farcical, any more wicked?—are the Marshalls and their aids any more despotic?—are they invested with any more, with as much power as the master, from which the Fugitive escapes? Is the agony of mind experienced by the fugitive, from the time of his arrest to the period of his delivery to his master, any more intense than that experienced by the slave, on his journey northward? What then constitutes the abominable feature of that much talked of law? It is not that those apprehended will not have the benefit of trial by jury—not that they shall be "delivered up on claim," but that they are to be plunged into American slavery—that "sum of all villanies;" this constitutes its soul-crushing feature.

Having, therefore, before us the fact of a state of oppression into which those coming under the influence or within the reach of the Fugitive law can be plunged, it is that, we maintain, which gives character to it, and which at the same time enables us to prove the truth of the assertion, that it is only an indignant feeling at the invasion of the rights of white men, which has caused the demonstrations against the law throughout the "Union," whenever and wherever they took place. Colored men's rights had been disregarded for centuries; the system of slavery, in all its horrors, was unheeded; but the moment that the Fugitive law was proclaimed, denying Northern men the right to extend the hand of charity to whoever they please, or commanding them on penalty to aid in enforcing it, then came the opposition of men who felt their rights invaded. Any one taking the trouble to look over the proceedings of meetings on that subject, and the papers published at that time, will bear witness to the correctness of our views.

Mr. Gaines' "parody on his Saxon story, will not be received in the sense in which he intends it. Northern men "are proud of the abolition name," when they have judgment enough to discern their own interests, and know that the term will be so understood.

The Uncle Tom literature, so triumphantly brought forward, with which to cap the climax, on northern sentiment, so far from proving a regard for the colored man, is another evidence of our position. In most of those works the heroes and heroines are nearly white; their fair complexion and flowing locks are made to stand forth as the prominent feature of the picture. That northern sympathy is enlisted more readily when "white fugitives" come among them, is a subject of frequent remark; let a dozen blacks pass northward, and the fact may be recorded; but the advent of one in whose lineaments Sazon parentage can be clearly traced, gives free play to the abolition sentiment of more than ninety one-hundredths of the papers devoted to "black manity." Uncle Tom's Cabin, deemed the greatest of its kind, is a clear exponent of SUCH liberal tendencies. Uncle Tom, the representative of the black man, has the position thought to be the best for his class: he suffers, submits, and dies. George Harris who represents the mixed races, rebels, escapes, and flies to a land, on this continent, where freedom reigns; but is suddenly seized with a desire to labor in a "greater field of usefulness"(?)—although more nearly allied to the European, he must go to the land of his fathers,(?) to assist in regenerating it.

Superficial observers may be carried away by specious appearances, but diligent searchers after the causes of things, cannot fail to be convinced of the truthfulness of our remarks. If a genuine regard for the colored man is so universal, how does Mr. Gaines account for the secret combinations which are now numerous all over the northern States, for the purpose of paralyzing the efforts of colored persons to acquire real estate, and to keep lucrative employments beyond their reach? We do not look for an answer to this question, but suppose that Mr. Gaines will say: "All men are born free and equal; but it does not follow that all men are equal in a state of society"—a reply having as much connection with the present question, as the one to which it was given. We asked Mr. Gaines a direct question; we wished to know why the colored higher classes in the States did not associate with whites of the same class? but when we look for a direct answer, there stands the quotations above given, which is a fair specimen of Mr. G.'s method of reasoning.

When Mr. G. began his series, we supposed that he was going to enlighten us on the subject of an en masse emigration to Canada, we were waiting to see reasons in proof of the fallacy of the doctrine; but they did not appear; the whole series, with the exception of the concluding part of the last, is occupied with a one-sided view of the condition of the free colored people of the States, and an attempt to make intelligent readers believe that Canada is in no better condition than the States. Talk of colored Canadians needing a certain combination of circumstances to elevate them, they are already elevated; they have only to go on progressing as do those around them; the moment they set foot on the soil, they stand up as British freemen; who can be more elevated?—that moment they stand as highly elevated above the colored men of the States as British liberty is in advance of American liberty. MISS M. A. SHADD,—I have the pleasure of sending you a few more names for your paper. I wish you would send the papers soon, for it has been some time since I got their names; the reason for the delay is, I lost my list of subscribers. If any one should send to you for a paper, saying that they have paid me, please send it to them, and charge the same to me.

Very truly yours, in great haste,
COSTUS S. DEPP.

MISS M. A. SHADD,—I hope you will send these subscribers their papers. I should have sent their names long since, had it not been for high water. I am in Iowa State at this time, lecturing on Slavery.

Please publish these letters in your paper.

Yours, &c.
COSTUS S. DEPP.

REMARKS.

Our readers will remember a statement made some time since, respecting Mr. Depp. We give the above two letters in explanation of tardiness on his part, as an act of justice. Mr. D. was an Agent part of last year, and, as a part of his movements then was not and has not been explained, we removed him from our list. Since then, he volunteers to act without receiving remuneration; of course, under such circumstances, we are not responsible to parties, though we should get their names, if we do not get the money; and indeed in no case are we, for payments should be cash, and in money that we can dispose of.

For the Provincial Freeman.

NO III.

TORONTO, April 17, 1855.

DEAR MADAM,—When I closed letter No. II, I had under consideration the merits and demerits of one of the two political parties in this Province, viz.: the Tory and Conservative, which I shall treat as one in the further discussion of this subject. It has ruled both in England and Canada, through many critical periods, and has steered the old ship safe through many breakers. Its most ardent friends, however, are willing to admit, that it has its faults, and has made many false steps; but there is nothing perfect that is sublunary. And those faults may be mainly attributed to a zeal for the maintenance of British principles and the supremacy of British institutions, than a desire to despotism; and these commend that party to the colored people rather than otherwise; for the temporal salvation of the colored people in America depends on the maintenance of British principles and institutions in America. It has done much to maintain them in this Province; and when assailed by external and internal foes, whose object was to wrest this noble Province from the excellent position it occupies, as a part of the finest Empire in the world, that party stood forth and defended it against its assaults. The result is, that the Province remains to this day in the possession of the most liberal nation on earth; and it is now affording protection and freedom to thousands of refugees from the despotism of the model republic; were it not for that, in all probability the African race would not now have one inch of ground on which to stand in America.

In 1812, when she thought England too much engaged in Europe to pay much attention to her, the United States cowardly and meanly seized upon that occasion to declare war against England, in hopes of taking Canada from her. Her forces were met by the Loyalists of this Country, and she was defeated in her object—they were Tories and Conservatives.

Again, in 1837 and '38, a rebellion broke out in this Province, the object of whose leaders was, its annexation to the United States—(some of whom are now in high places, by the influence of another party, though they are none the less to be dreaded.) They were met again by the Loyalists, and defeated. There is no doubt but there are those who are not now in the Tory and Conservative ranks, who bore a conspicuous part in defending this Province in those trying times; but that does not the less entitle that party to the confidence of the colored people who are most interested in the maintenance of British connexion. If it shall be found, that after both parties have been weighed, that the balances turn in favour of the Tory and Conservative party, while, on the other hand, if the support of British institutions should turn in favour of the Reform party, (the doings of which I shall notice when done with the Tory,) the colored people should hesitate not a moment in their choice, but take side with that party which is the most steadfast in British principles; so far, I see no leaning on the part of the Tory and Conservative party, as a party towards Republicanism or Republican institutions, to the exclusion of British institutions.

Yours, &c.
A DESCENDANT OF THE AFRICAN RACE.

The Black Swan in Baltimore--Narrative --Escapes, &c.

PHILADELPHIA, April 11th, 1855.

The Black Swan (Miss Elizabeth T. Greenfield), the celebrated artiste, gave four Concerts, last week, in the City of Baltimore; on which occasions she succeeded triumphantly, and gave great satisfaction and delight to her large and fashionable audiences, and was frequently encored. The tune of the Baltimore Press relative to her performances—Pro-Slavery, as they are,—manifested towards her, however, quite a respectful attitude, and not a few gentlemen and ladies "conquered their prejudices," and made "calls" upon the gifted vocalist, during the few days she remained in their midst. Considering the fact of her being in a slave-holding State—in the very heart of its most horrid prejudice—her entertainments were pre-eminently successful.

During the past few months, she has repeatedly given Concerts in this City, (Philadelphia,) to the lovers of music, charging from fifty cents to one dollar, admission; and notwithstanding the custom of Philadelphians towards those with whom she is identified in complexion, she has been enthusiastically received, and has elicited from the press, as well as from her audiences, much applause. It is not to be supposed, of course, that the same degree of attention and laudation has been lavished upon her, under existing circumstances, as there would have been if she had happened to have sprung from the "Saxon" race, especially if she could claim to be a "White American." Still there is great reason for encouragement, on the part of such among us who may be aiming to cultivate their talents, as may be abundantly proved in regard to the subject under present consideration, when the fact is borne in mind, that Miss Greenfield has arisen to her present pre-eminent position entirely by her own efforts—having had to contend with no ordinary embarrassments and obstacles during her whole career—the question spontaneously presents itself—What, therefore, might not many others among us accomplish, in some direction or other, by applying our attention and minds, as faithfully as she has done, to the improvement of intellect? Doubtless, mountains of prejudice, with thousands of other barriers now in our road, would soon be removed, and a changed state of things would be witnessed. There is no use of concealing this fact, however much reason we may have for condemning the oppressor.

Miss G. is about publishing a book, in which will be embraced a narrative of her life, especially her public career in this country and Europe. Doubtless there will be no small amount of curiosity and interest manifested on the part of the public, to know something more definitely than they have hitherto had the chance of gaining, of this extraordinary lady, which will in all probability cause the book to be of great demand. Of what will be its probable literary merits, I am not prepared to speak, but will venture to say, it will do no discredit to the authoress.

I have a brief paragraph of news, which I suppose will not be uninteresting to some of the Fugitive readers of the Provincial Freeman, if others should fail to be gratified with it. I will relate it in substance, as it was told to me by reliable friends. A few days since, Two Pieces of Merchandize (a Slave Mother and her little Child) were, at the City of Richmond, Va., placed on board of the steamer Jamestown, (running from the city above-named to New York), in charge of the Captain, to be safely delivered to a certain individual in Norfolk. The Captain informed the Mate of the disposition that was to be made of the property, then allowed himself to be fully absorbed in solemn meditation over the death of a very near and dear friend; hence, on the arrival at Norfolk, the property was not thought of: and on the steamer came, acting the noble part of a regular U. G. R. R. The cook (a colored man) having his "top eye open," kept quiet till the steamer had fairly reached New York, then quietly procured a carriage, and apprised the property that it was at liberty to assume a more independent air; consequently, it was not unconscious of the value of time; and lo! to the utter amazement of the Mate, it was seen making quick paces in the direction of the carriage. The Mate by this time fully realized the awful situation his bad memory had plunged him into, and knowing the offence to be one of an unpardonable nature, he hailed after the property, (which by the way had by this time fairly assumed the character of mother and daughter,) exclaiming that the steamer would be ruined!—would unquestionably be captured on her return! He very kindly offered the mother $100, if she would go back, in order that the threatened wrath of his Southern Master might be averted; but the mother remained deaf to his entreaties; consequently, he sought to enlist the influence of his Cook in the matter, by offering another $100; but the Cook very nobly declined. Of course he was told, if he did not aid in the matter, he, too, would be "ruined" on his return. Whereupon he replied, flatly, that he did not intend to return, but wanted his money, right away; further adding, that the woman's liberty was "worth millions," &c. Finally, the Mate had to relinquish his claim, feeling no doubt that he would have a very awful account to render on his return to Richmond.

Of late we have had some very extraordinary cases of escapes, by the "regular lines," of whom it would not be prudent in me to speak plainly; suffice it to say, however, that most of the slaves, at this day, as far as I have had opportunities of learning, have deeply thought on the subject of their freedom. Of Canada, and other places of retreat—strange as it may seem—they know much, and many very early in life begin to take measures by which to escape. Some of the bravest "specimens of humanity" that I have ever seen from the South, have come under my notice recently. How many thrilling chapters one might gather from listening to the recitals of some of these liberty-loving captives.

Bishop Nazerey and his lady arrived in this City from Toronto, yesterday; bring good health, and also favourable reports of affairs in Canada—the Provincial Freeman not excepted.

The Philadelphia M. E. Conference Pro-Slavery.

This body has been in session, for several days, at Lancaster. On the 5th, Bishop Waugh presented the resolutions of the Wisconsin Conference, and those of the North Ohio Conference, asking the concurrence of this body in recommending to the next General Conference, resolutions touching a change of the Disciplinary rule on Slavery.

The resolution of the Wisconsin Conference read as follows:

Resolved, That we request the next General Conference, so to alter the general rules in our Discipline on Slavery, as to read—"the buying, selling, or holding a human being as a slave."

This resolution was not concurred in by a vote of one hundred and thirty-four—none for concurrence.—The North Ohio Conference, reads as follows:

"The buying or selling of human beings with an intention to enslave such person, or holding any person in slavery, when emancipation can be effected without injury to the slave."

On this resolution, the following was the vote of the body:

Concurrence, eleven; non-concurrence, one hundred and twenty-four.

The present rule of the Discipline on this subject against Slavery, reads as follows:

"The buying or selling of men, women or children, with an intention to enslave them."

To prove still further that the Conference is bound and wedded, heart, and soul, to the buyers and sellers of human bodies and souls, we give the following resolutions, reported by the Conference Committee on Colonization, which were adopted:

1. That we entirely approve of the objects and efforts of the American Colonization Society.

2. That we will cordially co-operate with the executive officer of the Pennsylvania Colonization Society, and its agents, and that we bespeak for them and their mission a favorable reception from our churches and congregations.

3. That we will also co-operate with the Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia Colonization Societies in those parts of the Conference which lies within the boundaries of those States.

4. That we will preach, if practicable, on the subject of African Colonization, on the Sabbath immediately succeeding the 4th of July of this year.

Oh, for a back-bone in both Church and State!—Olive Branch.

Atrocious Outrage.

The Washington Star says that great excitement has been caused in that city by the discovery that a number of colored people, most of them free, and all of good character, have been found assembled in and belonging to a council, the principal object of which was to purchase the freedom of a young woman whom her owner was willing to sell. The entire party was arrested, 24 in number, all but four being free. The law which prohibits the assembling of colored people, slave or free, the smallest fine of which is five dollars, was read to them, and each one was searched and questioned. The articles found were a Bible, Senaca's Morals, Life in Earnest, scraps of poetry in manuscript, the printed constitution of a society called 'The Daughters of Jerusalem,' the object of which was stated to be 'to relieve the sick and bury the dead,' a set of regalia, and a subscription paper for the liberating fund, upon which were the names of Hon. Gerrit Smith, $30, paid, Hon. Wm. H. Seward, $5, Hon. J. R. Giddings, $1 and also the names of several of the respectable citizens of Washington. Nothing whatever was found to implicate the negroes in crime, yet four of them were sent to the work-house, one received six lashes! and the rest were compelled to pay a fine and costs of $3 58 cts., each.

And this atrocious outrage is perpetrated, in the name of law, at WASHINGTON!!—Liberator.

We find a statement in the Baltimore Sun, which we presume to be correct, to the effect that Richard Wynn and Alfred Woodley, who were part of the crew of a vessel which loaded some time ago in Roanoke river, were tried lately in Bertie county, North Carolina, on a charge of receiving and secreting a slave on board the vessel, with a view to his abduction; that the captain had discovered the fugitive, and caused the two sailors to be arrested; that Wynn was acquitted, but Woodley was found guilty, and will have to suffer the penalty of death. If a thousand dollars, or its value in any other description of property had been stolen, the penalty would not be so great; nay, had a child, a daughter of one of the most esteemed citizens, been stolen and foully dealt with, the life of the outlaw would be sacrificed. But rendering assistance and succour to a slave who wished to fly from slavery, is to be punished with death!—National Era.

A BRITISH RECRUITING OFFICER ARRESTED.—Last week the marshal of Philadelphia arrested, in this city, an officer of the British army, charged with having been engaged, contrary to the statute, in recruiting persons as soldiers for the service of a foreign power.—Life Illustrated.

DREADFUL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.—Three Irishmen were walking on the Niagara Falls Railroad, on Tuesday afternoon, about half a mile above Tonawonda, where a deep cut had been made through five or six feet of snow, to make a passage for the cars, when they heard the wistle of the engine. Two of them got away by running, while the third named Delany, was caught between the bank and the engine, whirled in under the wheels, and was actually torn limb from limb. He presented a horrible spectacle, his head being cut entirely off. An inquest was held, and a verdict given in accordance with the circumstance.—Buffalo Express.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—The Buffalo Republic learns that the four o'clock train from Niagara Falls, on Tuesday afternoon, ran upon an Irishman, name unknown, about half a mile from the place where the Irishman, Delany, was killed some three weeks since. He was seen by the engineer making motions for him to stop, as he could not get off the track. The engineer did his best to stop the train, but it caught the poor fellow and he was carried along the track some distance before the train could be arrested. When found, his head was partially under the cow-catcher and his body on top, and his heels thrown up against the pilot. He was so badly injured that he has since died of his wounds.

ANOTHER GRACE DARLING.—During the night of November 26th, last, in a thick snow storm, the wind blowing a heavy gale down the lake, the water chilled and making ice fast, the Canadian schooner Conductor, Captain Hackett, struck on the bar outside of Long Point Cut, on the island side, beat over and filled with water immediately, some distance from the shore, the sea making a complete breach all over her, driving the crew into the rigging for their lives. In the morning, at daylight, they were discovered clinging to the wreck by Mrs. Margaret Becker, a trapper's wife, the sole inhabitant on that end of the island, her husband being over on the main land. She immediately went down abreast of the vessel on the beach, and built a large fire of logs, made some hot tea, and prepared some food for them in case they reached the shore, and to refresh and encourage their drooping spirits by showing them succour was at hand. All that long day, with the tempest raging around her, did that heroic woman watch the poor suffering seamen clinging to the rigging of the wreck. Just at nightfall the Captain called to the mate, who was on the other side of the rigging, that they would all perish if they had to remain in the rigging another night, and that he was going to attempt to swim ashore, if he succeeded, the rest could follow him; if he drowned, they could cling to the rigging and run their chances. He leaped overboard and struck out. As he reached the undertow and backwater, his strength failing, and chilled and benumbed with cold, he would certainly have been drowned had not the woman gone to his rescue. She waded in through the surf up to her neck, grasping him and dragging him out safely. The balance of the crew then followed him one by one with the same result, this noble woman breasting the sea, and meeting and dragging them out singly as they came ashore! being in the main, instrumental in saving the whole crew. Such noble conduct deserves more than a passing notice. She is a woman of the most humble position in life, but showed herself on this occasion a true heroine, and possessed of the noblest qualities of heart and soul.—Buffalo Advertiser, Feb. 28.

Provincial.

PETITION

Of the Municipal Council of the County of Kent, complaining of certain grievances with respect to the issuing of Patents, and praying an examination.—Mr. LARWILL.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, in Provincial Parliament assembled, for the Province of Canada.

The Municipal Council of the County of Kent beg leave most respectfully to state to your Honorable House, that the manner in which the Crown and Clergy Lands in this County have been disposed of for some years past has been most injurious to the welfare of this County, whole blocks having been taken up by a few individuals to the exclusion of the actual settler, thereby keeping the County back for years from the improvements and benefits consequent upon acutal settlement. Your Petitioners believe that the evils complained of can in a great measure be laid to the charge of the late incumbent in the Crown Land Office in this County, against whom the following acts of injustice and erring can be established: 1st, That bona fide intending settlers have called at the Office of the Crown Land Agent in Chatham, for information as to Crown Lands in Kent, at the disposal of the Resident Agent; that certain lots, have been pointed out to them for sale; that the applicants for the purchase thereof have, after seeing the lots, been questioned by the Agent as to the quality and condition of the land; after having obtained such information, the Agent has informed the applicant that the lands had been sold to other parties while applicants were viewing the lands; that the applicants' information as to the value of the lands had been taken advantage of by the Agent for other parties than the applicants from whom the information as as to the value, &c., was first levied.

2nd. That the Crown Lands, and especially Clergy Lands, have been sold when they have been in the actual occupation of settlers, without an offer being made to such settlers to purchase the same by the Crown Land Agent, so that the purchaser has not only acquired a lot of wild land, but a cleared farm into the bargain, at the expense and labour of the poor settler, with or without the cognizance of the Crown Land Agent.

3rd. That the Crown and Clergy Lands have been disposed of in large blocks, without due consideration for the interest of the Crown and the public good, at such low prices, that the first speculators who purchased have re-sold them again to other speculators within a period of a few months, at advances on the price paid varying from fifty to one hundred per cent.; notices of land for sale of Clergy and Crown Lands, not having been properly advertised or published through the County, as in common justice they ought to have been.

4th. That it has been customary in the Agency here to record the names of applicants for lots in a book, with the promise that they should be notified when the lots would come into market, for which the sum of five shillings currency was charged, and that instances have come to the knowledge of your Petitioners where several applicants have paid for the same lot each the sum of one dollar.

That in consequence of the above mentioned want of judgment or direliction of duty on part of the person in charge of the Crown Land Department in this County, grievous wrong and injury has been done to its inhabitants and to parties desiring to settle thereon; that the public interest has greatly suffered, inasmuch as land that might have been bought directly by actual settlers at a moderate price, is now being purchased from speculators at double the price charged by the Crown, whereby it is manifest that both the Crown and the actual settler have been wronged.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly but earnertly request that your honorable House would be pleased to stay the issue of Patents, and to appoint Commissioners who shall have full power to summon and examine witnesses on oath, touching the grievances which your Petitioners have referred to.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JAMES SMITH,
Warden.

Brantford and Buffalo Railroad, Heavy Damages.

: At the Brant assizes, last week, the case of "Batchelor vs. the Railroad Company," was tried before His Honor Judge Draper, and damages to the amount of £6,178 17s. 6d. was awarded. From the report of the trial in the Brant Herald, we learn that the plaintiff, Batchelor, is a resident of Illinois, U. S., and while a passenger over the road, last summer, a collision took place, by which he had both of his legs broken—one was subsequently amputated, the other is permanently injured. His sufferings were of the most excrutiating description, and he is now incapacitated from any active pursuit. Mathew Crooks Cameron, Esq., of Toronto, brought the action, and displayed great ability in conducting the case. Mr. Galt, Q. C., defended the company. While we regret that any mismanagement on the part of the company's servants should result in so great a misfortune to any passenger, and thus make them liable for so large a sum, we are rejoiced that a Canadian jury did substantial justice to a foreigner, in a strange country.—Prototype.

Supposed Murder at Hamilton.

We learn from our Hamilton correspondent, that on Tuesday morning last, the body of a man, bearing numerous marks of violence, was found lying in the water in Burlington Bay, near the Suspension Bridge. The body was identified as that of a teamster, formerly in the employment of Nixson & Swales, wharfingers.

About two months since deceased was despatched with a load of goods to Wellington Square, and on his return, it appears he stopped for a short time at a tavern kept by a person named Skuce, immediately adjoining the Suspension Bridge; while there two men asked him if he would permit them to ride with him on his way home, which request was not granted, and an altercation ensued. Since that period no tidings have been received of him, his horses returning home without a driver. A quantity of money and a valuable watch remained on the body of the unfortunate man, a proof that he was not assaulted with intent to rob, but from malevolent feelings.—Globe, April 19th.

NIAGARA, April 18, 1855.—The town of Niagara was this morning, about a quarter before seven o'clock, visited by a fearful hurricane. The night had been very stormy, with thunder and heavy showers of rain. A little before the hour referred to, the sky assumed a sea-green colour, succeeded in a few minutes by a clear white, which indicated the presence of the hurricane. The rush of wind lasted about five minutes, and was at its height not more than one minute. But the damage it did was tremendous.

It struck the Niagara Car Works, and in an instant levelled two large finishing shops, each 175 feet by 50, containing a number of new cars, and took the roofs partly off some of the other buildings. A large new frame 200 feet by 70, intended for a foundry, and ready to be enclosed, was piled in a mass. The engine house of the Erie and Ontario Railway was very much twisted, and the large wood shed nearly destroyed.

Throughout the town the damage was very great—roofs, fences, and chimneys blown down in all directions. The St. Andrew's Church received great injury—a third of the roof and gallery inside were swept away. Graves and Pruden's large Daguerrean Saloon was turned over two or three times, and is a complete wreck.

The loss to Messrs. Brainerds, Pierson & Co. is great, but the amount has not yet been ascertained. We learn however, that their principal building, containing their machinery, is not injured except the roof, and that it will be in operation again in two days, and their other buildings will be replaced temporarily, so that their whole works may again be in operation in ten days from this time.

It happened most providentially that the day had been set apart as the Fast Day, else we should have had to lament the loss of from 50 to 100 lives in the Car Factory. As it is, thank God, neither life was lost, nor any person severely injured.

We have not heard, up to the present hour, whether the hurricane extended far. It came directly from the north, and apparently struck the ground at intervals.

A child of Mr. P. Conlin, flour dealer, Adelaide street, was run over by a horse and buggy last evening, and miraculously escaped with but a slight cut on the head.

A boy apparantly about 14 years of age, an apprentice to a shoemaker here, was found dead in the flume, at Gilmore & Co.'s, Mills, Port Hope, supposed to have been there for some six weeks, as he left his employer at that time and was believed to have absconded.

LIGHTNING.—The crash of thunder which so shortly, sharply, and decisively frightened some of our citizens from the study of their bohea, yesterday evening, was accompanied by a flash of lightning which, in its descent, tore some of the stone ornaments from the eastern cross of the Roman Catholic Cathedral, in Church Street. The stone separated from the base of the cross was sufficiently large to have occasioned serious damage to any person with whom it might have come in contact, but we are happy to say that no injury, save to the base of the cross, occurred.—Globe, April 20

PATRIOTIC FUND.—Crowland, a rich township, refuses to contribute one farthing! Some black crows here! A few mechanics and laborers in the village of Chippewa, in the employment of O. T. Macklem, Esq., nobly contributed as follows: Office, £17 17s. 6d.; Stove works, £19 5s.; steam engine works, £8 17s. 6d.; Tannery, £4. 15s.—total, £50 15s. Long may this establishment flourish, and prosperity attend the patriotic band that have done honor to Chippewa!

Humberstone has contributed £100, and old Stamford £100. In both these townships the sentiments expressed by the different speakers indicated a truly British spirit, and such exhibitions will, ere long shame such people as the Crowlanders into a sense of propriety, if not of patriotism.—Prototype.

Hedgerows.

There seems to be a remarkable backwardness among our Canadian farmers in preparing for the impending scarcity of wood, a scarcity so great that thousands of miles of snake-fences, now rapidly decaying, can never be replaced by similar materials. Our poor opinion is, that Agricultural Societies should do everything in their power to encourage the planting of clumps of trees for shade, and shelter, and firing, and also hedge rows, a fence far superior in every respect to the present fence of cedar rails.

To say that hedge rows won't grow, is an unmitigated nonsense. Near Newmarket are hawthorn fences twenty feet high, which, if properly trimmed, would have made a fence as good as any old country farmer could desire to have.

In this very city on Wellington street, and at a few yards east of the Don Bridge, and many other places, are proof to confirm our statement. The materials, too, are at hand. The Plains of Abraham produce a thorn admirably adapted for the purpose. The States produce the Osage Orange and the Rhamnus Catharticus, or Buckthorn—and we have the Beech.

West of England farmers will recollect that in Devonshire and Cornwall there are thousands of miles of hedges made with the beech dwarfed down. At George Lesslie's excellent nursery can be seen a hedgerow of the Buckthorn, perhaps, the best material we have for a fence. Cattle will not touch it, and it bears the knife better than other plants.

But in this as in most Canadian matters, the hand to mouth system prevails. To-day is all we care for—to-morrow is unthought of, and unheeded!

To this subject we shall soon recur again, and in the mean time we invite the attention of Professor Buckland and Sheriff Treadwell to the following offer which we made 18 months since, and now repeat, that we will give—

1. A Silver Medal of ten dollars value to the person who shall plant and maintain the best hedgerows on his farm.

2. Another of similar value to the person who shall plant clumps of trees about his property for ornament, shade, and shelter.

3. Another of the same value to any person who shall plant trees most judiciously for shade and shelter round his homestead.—Anglo Canadian.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

CAUTION!!!

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended. Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, lisen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

Elected to serve during the present year:—

W. J. MACDONELL,—PRESIDENT,
P. J. O'NEILL,—VICE-PRESIDENT,
MESSRS. S. G. LYNN, P. FOY, & DR. HAYES,
BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

Office on Colborne Street, Corner of the Old Post Office Lane.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

SIR,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,
DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

JOHN E. FORCE,
Publisher and Proprietor.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Universal Freedom, and a British Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the grounds of the complexional characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacity, as citizens,—1st: To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage and support a Press, or those Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and this country, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle herein, by counselling the former to be a "good peasantry" for the latter, as their highest ambition; or to aggregate themselves into exclusive communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of white complexion. 3rd. To do all in our power to remove the stain of Slavery from the face of the earth, and particularly, as subjects of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by all legitimate means; and 5th. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies', Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specfied, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8	do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13	do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20	do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ TO EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper,

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

Poetry.

Forgive and Forget.

There's a magic in kindness
That springs from above—
'Tis the type of forgiveness
And herald of love.
If a nighbour offend thee,
Revenge not—but yet
Remember the motto—
"Forgive and forget."

There's a magic in kindness—
Its home is the heart,
And existence must cease
Ere its power depart:
It calmeth our passions
And sorrows—then let Us remember the motto
"Forgive and forget."

Thus friendship will flourish
And fel owship spread,
And for strife and contention
Peace prosper instead:
And the wide world will find
That it owes a deep debt
To that sweet little motto—
"Forgive and forget."

The Maroons.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

The Cavern—Freme and Marie.

But the poor Maroon was alive. The hand of Providence had not only preserved him, but even converted his fall into a means of safety.

At the spot where he had disappeared, the mountain presented a frightful aspect. At a height of 2400 feet, it had a perpendicular descent. There was nothing from the summit to the base but loose projecting masses of boulder, with here and there a spot on which the hoof of a goat might scarcely rest in safety, or occasionally a small ledge too far indented in the face of the mountain to be accessible from above or below by any ordinary means. It was, therefore, not without apparently good reason, the negro-hunters had withdrawn with the firm persuasion that their human game, the Capre, had infaliably perished. In falling, however, he had mechanically extended his hands, grasping at the air, at the surface of the rock, at every thing and any thing within reach. By good luck he clutched one of those strong creepers which are common in tropical countries, and which, growing in exposed places, hang down like the ropes on board ship. The one that broke his fall was long as well as strong, and he let himself gently down by means of it, until his feet rested on a small ledge of rock, about midway down the face of the precipice.

He was safe. But he could not credit his senses. He feared lest that, from above, the man-hunters should cast down huge stones upon and crush him. He therefore sought a hiding-place, and presently espied a large dark hole, in the body of the rock, and on a level with the platform on which he stood. He cautiously looked in. It was a spacious cavern, and he forthwith groped his way into it; for he could not see. Soon, however, a glimmer of light enabled him to distinguish objects. What saw he, then, that made him stop suddenly short? A young female, quite white, seated in a corner, holding a mulatto infant in her arms, to which she was giving a mother's sustenance.

This unexpected sight caused him to stand as if rooted to the spot. At first he doubted its reality, opening wide his large black eyes, as though better to assure himself that it was indeed no vision; yet, bewildered and troubled with a thousand fears of the whites and of phantoms, so that he durst neither advance nor withdraw. All at once the young woman, altogether absorbed in the cares she was extending to her infant, said, without raising her head:

"Thou, Freme?"

The Capre, yet more disturbed at this address, muttered a few unintelligable monosyllables in reply.

"Thou art very late to-day, my dear," continued she: "very late. I heard the hounds bark. I thought of the negro hunters, and of thee, and shuddered for fear."

These last words recalled the Capre to a sense of his situation. He no longer felt that he was in a dream, nor feared that he had fallen by chance upon the hiding-place of the man-hunters. Recovering from his temporary stupor, he answered as calmly as he could:

"Yes! There are negro-hunters and hounds in the neighbourhood. But Heaven's kind hand is there too." Then he added, though not without hesitation: "I am not Freme, Madame."

On hearing the strange voice, and this yet stranger confession, the young woman started and gazed at the intruder with such an unmistaken expression of alarm that he at once strove to pacify her:

"Fear nothing Madame," he said: "I am only a poor Maroon. I was hunted by the dogs you heard, and missing my foot-hold, fell near this spot. I seek not to do harm to any one. I only seek a place of security."

The young woman passed her hand across her forehead, as if to clear away the cause of her momentary troubles, saying:

"You very much frightened me."

She colored up as she uttered these words, for at that moment there also entered the cavern a tall, well-formed young negro, of erect carriage and martial gait, and whose frame indicated the possession of great strength and supleness of limb.

"What do I hear? Who has frightened thee, Marie?" he exclaimed, bounding towards the young woman, but without perceiving the Capre, who was standing near her.

"No, I was alarmed without reason," she replied, in a tone which indicated how welcome his presence was. At the same time pointing to the stranger, she added: "he is a poor Maroon who has come to seek concealment with us."

The Capre muttered a few words as if to excuse himself. But the young negro interrupted him by exclaiming, looking at him from top to toe:

"But how ever came you to find your way here, brother?"

"Well," answered the Capre candidly: "you know we say that when the house gets too hot, it is time to leave it. The master is a bad man. I left him, and took the road to the Salazians. I turned Maroon. I had gained the summit of the mountain nearly, but being hungry, I staid to eat a guava or two. I had scarcely tasted them before the man-hunters surprised me. Their dogs attacked me, and in defending myself. I drew back; but in doing so, and not having eyes in the back of my head, I missed footing, and all at once fell down the precipice. Fortunately I succeeded in grasping a creeper, which saved me, and was the means of my coming to this place."

"You were fortunate," said Freme, nodding his head. "We have been here twelve moons, and you, brother, are the first person we have seen in our cavern; for there is no road to it either from above or from below, and you must have had a special share of fortune to find us out. But, brother, you are fatigued. You are hungry. Sit down on this bench. We will eat together."

So saying, and pointing to the seat, he took out from a wallet a few fruits he had just gathered. Marie, having deposited her infant—which was now asleep—upon a mat by her side, went away to fetch some roasted bananas, and a salad of palm-cabbage she had prepared. The three seated themselves in a circle, after the fashion of the Arabs, and commenced their frugal repast, the conversation continuing:

"So the masters are still cruel," observed the young woman, addressing the Capre in a tone of commisseration.

"Yes, Madame. If it is not they, it is their representatives, which comes to the same thing as far as the unfortunate slaves are concerned, who have no respite in their miseries and torment. Not only are they badly fed, and over-worked, but there are masters, of whom you, may perhaps have heard, and who, like mine, cut them to pieces with rattans, as though they had been slashed with a cutlass: who load them with chains and burn them to death by a slow fire, tied up to a tree or confined in a black-hole: who break their bones without remorse; sear them in the face with red-hot irons, or disfigure them by kicking them: who force them to swallow the most disgusting offal and filth; tear out their hair, pour boiling oil or sugar into their mouths——"

"Enough! Enough! I beseech you, say no more," exclaimed Marie, trembling with horror.

"I understand, Madame," answered the Capre, "I understand why this recital arouses your indignation and hurts your feelings. You are young, gentle, and kind. But why are not all the Whites the same? They do not believe we can suffer. If by any chance we complain to those who are our judges, they close their eyes and shut their ears, and drive us from their presence as liars and vagabonds. Ah, Madame, this is very, very sad. Will God ever put an end to this accursed system of Negro Slavery; a system which can surely not exist even in the bottomless pit of perdition? Yet it is said, that in England there are humane Whites who sympathize with us in our misery, who are pleading our cause, and demanding that we should be restored to liberty. They call that liberty Emancipation, and we are told that it will not be long ere it comes."

"Oh, what happiness!" ejaculated Marie with vivacity. "At least then there will be an end to such cruelties and injustice."

"I hope for nothing of the sort," observed Freme. "I have heard all this said and repeated long, and long ago. But the day is always to come. It never comes. Whites are Whites. They think and labour for themselves. The Blacks are their property: their slaves. They are not going to be in a hurry to set them free. If amongst them there are a few who take pity on us Blacks, there are many more who maintain that what is done to us is right, and who makes others believe so too: that we are quite happy enough as we are; that we are only fit to be shut up in a cage; to be kept in chains all our life. The Whites support one another. They are rich and powerful. They plead for our continuing in Slavery, and they gain their cause with the money they have wrung from our toil. Besides the money they expend in this manner, to our detriment they make the most of their colour—of their power over us. They make the produce of our very labour bear witness against us: sugar, coffee, cocoa, cotton, pepper, cloves, nutmegs: every thing we grow, in fact. Don't talk to me, then, about our liberty, and all these voices against us. Then, again, are we near Europe? a vast ocean separates us from it, and people there have plenty of other things to think of besides us, who are not seen, who are not known, and against whom every body believes every thing. No, no! Those good folks will occupy themselves with what is nearest to them and concerns them most, and will forget us because we are far away. They will look after their woods, and their animals, but not after us. They will make laws, as they have made them in this island, to preserve plants, birds, fish, horses, and dogs: but to preserve us, to lighten our burdens, they will do nothing. How then can we hope for liberty?"

"Ah," ejaculated Marie; "why dost thou say we, Freme? God is great. He is all-powerful too. Thou know'st how good He has been to us. Did He not save us? He will also save the Blacks. Hope; let us hope. The Whites have hearts, mind, intelligence, and their interest not less than justice will one day make them to see that Slavery is an evil thing. They will then abolish it. It will be seen that this will be a blessing not only for the Blacks, but for the Whites themselves, and for the whole world."

"Yes! yes! Madame is right," exclaimed the Capre, in a tone of deep conviction. "I approve of those words. I do hope for this great blessing, because it is just, and therefore it must come. But in expectation of it, I quitted the great house, and turned Maroon. We will, however, leave this subject, and speak of yourselves: of you, brother! I have not yet recovered from my surprise. How came you to be here with a white lady? so handsome too."

"Ah!" answered Freme, "it is a long story. I fear it would fatigue you to listen to it."

"No, no! replied the Capre, with all the eagerness of newly awakened curiosity.

"Well, then," resumed Freme, "I will attempt it; but Marie must help me out a little."

"Very well," she said, timidly. "I will, Freme."

Freme commenced his story, the Capre listening an attentive ear.

Miscellaneous.

Sir Robert Peel.

At the Bristol Athenæum almopation last week, the person whose speaking excited the greatest sensation was Sir Robert Peel. The following description of himself and his oratory is from the Bristol Times: When Lord John had gone half through his address, we saw a young fellow with long legs, a red face, a moustache and imperial, a rose in his button-hole, and a stout stick in his fist, stalk across the platform and take a seat, which that interminable but clever talker, Mr. Commissioner Hill, (only less loquacious and lively than his "Friend Brougham") had conceded to him. Soon after Mr. Miles said, "I call upon Sir Robert Peel to propose the next resolution," and up rose this long-legged, fast-looking young fellow, still with his stick in his hand. Every one gazed with curiosity upon the inheritor of a great name—all that Englishmen so long associated with high thought and political sagacity. But what a different figure, air and manner, from the staid, distant and didactic Sir Robert, so long the chieftain of the British Commons! Nevertheless, the wild son won like enchantment upon the audience—"Fluent as a book," away he rattled, wanting neither words nor confidence; and as for action, he must have almost danced a jig to be more animated. He had a kind of Hey presto! conjurer's cutting trick, of quickly flourishing his hand—now towards the audience, now over the table—as though shifting three thimbles and a pea; and, as he elicited cheer after cheer, jumping a couple of steps back with a kind of agility, and drawing himself up as though he were half inclined to crow. But his Stick! that as Lord Castlereagh would say, was the great feature of the speech; he tucked it under his arm, hugged it to his breast, leant upon it, flourished it, threw it on the table, and took it up again, and looked all the while just that sort of fellow, who did not care how soon he seconded his argument with his shillelah, on the head of any gentleman present. It was so essential to his ease, that I believe if you took it from him, and stitched up his breeches pocket, into which he was ever thrusting his hand, he could not have gone through three sentences. His maiden speech in the House of Commons was delivered in company with this same blackthorn of his, which created as great sensation as its owner, and I expect he is so fond of the instrument that he must take it to bed with him. And yet it is no beauty after all—no amber headed, clouded cane, but a very plebeian looking baculum, such as you may any day purchase at Donnybrook for two groats. There was not anything very remarkable in what Sir Robert said but it was bold and shrewd enough, and he said it off in a dashing way, creating a greater sensation by the odd suddenness with which he exclaimed, "Good God, ladies and gentlemen," then if he had delivered the peroration of "single-speech Hamilton." Having finished, he tossed himself back in his chair with a "never-me-care, I'm the boy for bewitching ye," air. The ladies all laughed; Lady John Russell, perhaps the heartiest, while the little Lord President himself looked from between his fingers with a strange expression, at the long-legged, rattle-brained, warm hearted son of his great antagonist, as much as to say, "Upon my word, the rake may yet end by becoming a statesman."

An Amorous Æronaut.

While Mons. Godard was filling an immense balloon in the Champ-de-Mars, he amused the spectators by sending up the small figure of a man, the perfect semblance of M. Thiers, without the spectacles. The little man being filled with gas, rose majestically into the air, and was soon lost to view among the clouds. His adventures, which became known next day, were curious Thanks to a strong and favourable gale, which impelled him on his course, the little balloon man arrived the same afternoon in the site of a fine country house in the neighbourhood of Bievro. It was near the hour of dinner, and the lady of the mansion, who naturally thought herself perfectly safe, was occupied in the mysteries of her toilet. It was a warm day, and she had opened one of the windows which looked out upon the park, and was safe from any prying eyes. While tranquilly engaged, by the assistance of a corset-lacing, in reducing her waist to a size and shape that would reflect credit on her husband's taste, she was suddenly startled by a blast of wind followed by a strange noise; and immediately the casement was thrown open, and the little balloon man entered her chamber unannounced. The lady utters a cry of terror, and throws a shawl over her shoulders. The little man driven by the wind, throws himself upon the unhappy woman, who screaming louder than ever, pushes him off, and he concealed himself under her bed. Just as the wife in a supplicating voice, says to this novel Don Juan, "Ah, Monsieur, go away or you will ruin me!" the husband furiously rushed in, crying, "Ah! the wretch, I have him now!" and goes in search of his sword to run him through the body. The wife, more dead than alive, reiterates in the midst of sobs: "Fly! fly! Monsieur and save me the sight of a dreadful tragedy." The husband arrives, armed to the teeth, followed by the whole household, who seek to mollify his anger. While two of his friends hold the husband, a third, stooping down, [illegible] the friend, who for good cause, [illegible] sword, and catches him by the [illegible] from his concealment, when lo! Monsieur Balloon, no longer held down by the bedstead, raises himself erect, swells out, and rises majestically to the ceiling, to the immense amusement of the spectators, while the poor, jealous husband slinks away, sword and all.

DRESS.

Dress has two functions—to clothe and to ornament—and, while we can not lose sight of either point, we must not attribute to one a power which belongs to the other. The essential requirements of dress is to cover and make comfortable the body, and of two forms of dress which fulfil this function equally well, that is the better which is most accordant with the laws of beauty. But fitness must in nowise be interfered with; and the garb which infringes on this law gives us pain rather than pleasure. We believe that it will be found that fitness and beauty, so far from requiring any sacrince for combination, are found each in the highest degree where both are most fully obtained—that the finest, most comfortable dress is that which is the most graceful or becoming. Thus, to our mind, there is no garb for men so entirely answering the demands of comfort and use, as that worn in England and Germany in the fifteenth century, fitting snugly enough to follow the shape of the limbs throughout; and every artist will admit there is no other so picturesque. But be this as it may, fitness is the primary demand; and the dress that appears uncomfortable is tasteless.

But in the secondary functions of dress, ornamentation, there are several diverse objects to be attained—dignity, grace, vivacity brilliancy, are qualities distinguishing different individuals, and indicating the impression they wish to make on society, and are expressed by different combinations of the elements of beauty, line, or form, and color. When the appareling of the outer being is in most complete harmony with the mental constitution, the taste is fullest.

There are certain laws of form and color which we wish to evolve before going into detail or illustration of our views. In form, simplicity and long unbroken lines give dignity (a robe is therefore more dignified than a coat, vest, and pants,) while complicated and short lines express vivacity. Curves, particularly if long and sweeping give grace, while straight lines and angles indicate power and strenth. In color, unity of tint gives repose—if sombre, gravity, but if light and clear, then a joyous serenity—variety of tint giving vivacity, and it contrasted, brilliancy.

Observing these laws, let us suppose a lady of a tall figure, dignified mien, and tranquil temperament, inclining to joyousness, wishing to array herself so as to heighten the impression her character would give. She would select stuffs of quiet, light tints, probably grays of one character mainly, and have them made up in the simplest form possible, coming high in the neck, and flowing down to the ground—if in the parlour, possibly, trailing. She would have no flounces to disturb the simplicity of the lines (unless she would be shortwaisted, when flounces would hide it by dividing the length of the skirt). She would display little or no jewelry, or any other ornament except, perhaps, a pale flower on her bosom, or a ribbon at the throat. If she used ornament to any extent, it would probably be around her head, which, being the noblest portion of the physique, deserves the fullest adornment.

Her opposite, a gay, sparkling little beauty, would of course go to the opposite side of the scale, except that she would avoid the inordinate use of high color. The great masses of the stuff being of nearly neutral tints, the trimmings of brilliant contrasting colors, will tell much more forcibly than if there were large masses of the same colors, which would make her look gaudy rather than brilliant. She should wear flounces, probably, and brilliants.

The color of a dress would in all cases be determined by the complexion; the rule being, that if any color is in excess in the face, it must be destroyed by the same color occurring more intense in the dress. Thus if the face is too rosy, the dress should be of a pale red, but in the trimmings, an intensely red ribbon should "kill," as the artists say, the red in the face. The same object may be attained by the ribbon with a dress of another color; but at all events the dress should not be of a brilliant red, as then the only sensation received would be one of overpowering warmth of color—a tout ensemble of red.

As power and strength are not elements of beauty, we must be careful how we admit them into our components of taste.

A Drove of "Irish Bulls."

The following piece of "Composition" may be "backed against any thing ever produced. It was written half a century ago by Sir Boyle Roach, a member of the Irish Parliament, in the "Troublous Times of "Ninety-eight," when a handful of men, from the County of Wexford struck terror into the hearts of many gallant sons of Mars, as well as the worthy writer himself. The letter was addressed to a friend in London; and it is old enough to be new to nine or ten of our readers.

"My Dear Sir—Having now a little peace and quietness, I sit down to inform you of the dreadful bustle and confusion we are all in from these blood-thirsty rebels, most of whom are (thank God!) killed and dispersed. We are a pretty mess; can get nothing to eat, nor any wine to drink, except whiskey; and when we sit down to dinner we are obliged to keep both hands armed. While I write this, I hold a sword in each hand, and a pistol in the other.

"I concluded from the beginning that this would be the end of it, and I see I was right; for it is not half over yet. At present are such doings-on, that every thing is at a standstill. I should have answered your letter a fortnight ago; but I did not receive it until this morning. Indeed, scarcely a male arrives without being robbed. No longer ago than yesterday, the coach with the mails from Dublin were robbed near this town. The bags had been injudiciously left behind, for fear of accident; by good luck there was nobody in it but two outside passengers; who had nothing for the thieves to take. Last Thursday notice was given that a gang of rebels were advancing here under the French standards, but they had no colours, nor any drums, except pagpipes.

"Immediately every man in the place, including women and children, ran out to meet them. We soon found our force much too little: we were too near to think of retreating. Death was in every face, and to it we went, and by the time half our little party were killed, we began to be all alive again. Fortunately, the rebels had no guns, except pistols and pikes, and as we had plenty of muskets and ammunition, we put them all to the sword. Not a soul of them escaped, except some that were drowned in an adjacent bog; and in a very short time, nothing was to be heard, but silence. Their uniforms were all different colors but mostly green. After the action we went to rummage a sort of camp, which they had left behind them. All we found was a few pikes without any heads, a parcel of empty bottles full of water, and a bundle of French commissions filled with Irish names. Troops are now stationed all round the country, which exactly squares with my ideas. I have only time to add that I am in great haste.

"P. S.—If you do not receive this, of course it must have miscarried, therefore I beg you will write to let me know."

Right after All.—An Irish gentleman having a party to meet at a tavern, exclaimed, on arriving and finding the room empty,

"So I am first after all."

The waiter informed him that he was mistaken—that the party had been there and were gone.

"Very well," replied the Hibernian, "then I have made no mistake, for, as they were all here before me, surely I was right in saying I was first after all!"

SNOBS.

How long the valuable, useful and able, among the different classes of English Society, will consent to have their noses held to the grindstone by a self-styled aristocracy, is of course a matter of conjecture—judging by the past, we should say always, but one would suppose that the stiff old Cambells, and Camerons of the Scottish service, and fiery descendants of the Irish Kings, would reluct, at the supercilious snobs of the "Lord Forths" of the British service.

The New York Tribune says upon this subject:

"The word snob is particularly English. It is often applied to all persons in England not of the gentry or nobility. We have heard a very eminent physician there called a snob, and on asking the reason, were told that he was a man of no family. The milder applications of the term snob is given to pretentious underbreeding. The snobbishness of the English in regard to rank—that is their deference to it—surpasses belief. It may be equalled among the Hindoo castes, but cannot be excelled.

"We are reminded of this charming subject by some remarks of the British press on the late discussions growing out of the aristocratic mismanagement in the East—for example, this to the Editor of The London Daily News:

"Sir:—Although I scarcely now consider myself a member of the medical profession, I cannot help directing your attention to a paragraph in Lord Palmerston's speech, of last evening, as reported in your paper of this day. (Feb. 20): 'There,' where the system 'has broken down—there, where evils have 'arisen from want of capacity, want of 'energy, want of intellect, and vigor for the 'performance of duty—it was in those departments where the gentry were not, the 'noblemen were not, but which were filled 'by persons belonging to the other classes 'of the community, the commissariat, the 'medical, the transport services.' The people appear to be so deluded by the merits, or supposed merits, of the noble lord, that even the members of the medical profession will bear this additional 'snubbing' with their accustomed humility, coming, as it does, from one whose antecedents are so 'harmonious.' But, Sir, as the noble Lord has spoken of intellect, let me put this practical question to him: Among the whole muster-roll of the nobility, (so called,) always excluding government politics, (a system of trickery which may be learnt by any parish school boy,) can men be found equal in intellect, and in usefulness to their fellow-creatures, to Jenner, Cuvier, Hunter, and a thousand others I could name? The other classes who are included probably by his lordship under the aristocratic designation of 'snobs,' I leave to meditate upon this strange disclosure.

I am, &c.,
"Edward Crisp, M.D.
"21 Parliament st., Feb. 20, 1855."

On a speech of Lord Malmesbury, touching the acts of the aristocracy, Punch discourses as follows:

"It is not every kind of idle life, though, which is aristocratic; for a man, without being an aristocrat, may be an pander of a rogue. We would submit to the consideration of Lord Malmesbury the following definition of the term 'aristocrat.' An aristocrat is a person who behaves as such, and on whose character, as such, there is no stigma. The only stigma on the aristocratic character is trade, or a servile occupation, or near relationship to a tradesman or working man. Crime, or affinity to a criminal is none; when one of the old French noblesse picked a pocket he did not therefore cease to be an aristocrat; neither would a British Lord, whose father should be hanged. Aristocracy, then, essentially consists in behaviour; what is the behaviour which constitutes the aristocrat? It is not doing good; any snob may feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick; perform every duty towards his neighbor but that of deporting himself, and speaking, with propriety. The spirit of Aristocracy is a sense of superiority to the industrious classes expressed in the conduct and bearing. The aristocratic body consists of persons who sympathize with and encourage one another in this feeling and deportment. They regard the bulk of the nation with contempt as a race of shopkeepers; and the bulk of the nation accepts the contempt, and repays it by adulation."

A competent witness is Punch,—and what a withering blast he gives the bulk of the nation as fawning slaves!

This servility does not desert the race of snobs when transplanted to this country. What a rush there is by certain members of a certain society after a live Lord.

Tit for Tat.—The stipend of a minister of the Scotch Established Church is often paid in grain, as witness the following colloquy related by Dr. Aiton: "Will am, you must bring me better grain; I can't sell it, it is so bad." "Its just what the land produces, sir, and I hae nothing else to gie." "But then you are a bad farmer, William; you must farm better." "Tut, sir; tut sir; that's no civil; I'll no tak' that off your han'; I attend your kirk, an' you gie just what the land produces, an' I dinna fin' faut—I dinna tell you that you are a bad preacher, although you tell me I am a bad farmer; but if I was to step into the Burgher meeting-house, I might get baith bigger measure and corn better digested. If ye'll ca' the weak corn and caff o' your sermons, I'll put my corn anee mair thro' the fanners."

Agricultural, &c.

Planting Trees.

Messrs. Editors—I saw in a late number of Life Illustrated some excellent remarks on the subject of tree-planting—recommending the planting of the native forest trees of our own country, or fruit trees by the roadside, as a means of beautifying our farms and adding to their value.

I would also recommend planting belts and groups of evergreens about our farm-buildings, not only for beauty, but for use, in breaking the chilling winds, thereby rendering more comfortable the habitations of man and the domestic animals. For belts the American arbor-vitæ and hemlock spruce are best adapted, while the pines, firs, etc., are better for farming groups, in which good taste would perhaps suggest the occasional intermingling of deciduous trees to prevent monotony.

Perhaps a few practical hints on selecting and planting trees may be of use.

In selecting deciduous trees, I would prefer those not more than eight feet high, grown in places as open as possible, as such trees would be better shaped, and there being less loss of roots than would attend the removing of larger trees, would be far more likely to succeed, and will grow more symetrically than the long poles, with their tops cut off, which we so often see planted. They should be taken up with as many roots as possible, and only enough of the top removed to balance the loss of roots. Trees that have been once or twice transplanted into cultivated ground are generally much better supplied with roots than those taken from the woods. Dig a large hole, and plant the tree in loose, rich earth, with the roots spread out in their natural position; press the earth closely around them, so that there will be no cavity under or among them. A pail of water thrown in while filling up the hole serves to settle the earth among the roots, and mulching with litter or coarse manure to the depth of five or six inches around the tree a little farther than the roots extend, will protect from drouth, and generally obviate all necessity for subsequent watering.

Evergreens require more care; their roots should never be allowed to become dry. If they are to be carried far, the roots should be coated with mud and packed with wet moss. They will not bear exposure to the sun or wind. Nursery grown trees, with proper management, rarely fail, while about nine tenths of those taken from swamps usually die from exposure. Trees grown from small plants in the nursery will be better supplied with roots, limbs and foliage than those taken directly from the forest. My choice would be to select trees from three to four feet high, with branches extending to the ground. H.

Why Gardens are more Permanently Productive than Farm Fields.

The possibility of rendering farm grounds intended for cereal crops as permanently fertile as well-managed gardens usually are, is strongly insisted on by many writers. To the unreflecting farmers, their reasoning appears sound and sensible; but the difficulties in the way of rescuing the promised fertility are incomprehensible. He ploughs deep, pulverises thoroughly, manures heavily, and yet, strange to tell, he cannot succeed in producing more than two or, at farthest, three successive good crops of the same cereal on the same field. He finds a great deterioration both in quantity and quality, and finally abandons the theory, with a mind fully satisfied of the impracticability of rendering his fields productive for a long succession of cereal crops of the same kind. This seeming mystery is not so difficult of solution.

"All, or nearly all know plants impoverish the soil, principally during the period of their forming and maturing their seeds: and the cereal grasses owe their chief exhausting effects to the fact of their being grown mainly for the sake of their seeds."

The products of the garden, on the other hand, are grown for a different purpose. But few are permitted to run to seed, nearly all being cultivated for the succulent character of their leaves, stems or roots, and are generally removed from the soil at a stage of their growth when they carry away with them but little of the fertility which has not been drawn from the water and atmosphere. In addition to this, gardens are much more frequently and thoroughly pulverised and manured than fields intended to clerical crops, and as a consequence a greater amount of chemical action, and more complete aciation are secured. After wheat is sown, but a trifling amount of further cultivation is practicable. The same may be said of rye, oats, barley, &c., Corn admits of, and indeed requires attention after planting, but the fields in which wheat and rye are sown, must necessarily be permitted to rest for nearly a twelve month from the time of seeding while the product of the garden, as a general thing, being required for the table before arriving at perfect maturity, are removed, the soil from which they are taken is re-dug, re-pulverised and re-manured twice or thrice during the same period, and thus, all the requisites of permanent fertility are brought to bear upon it.—Olive Branch.

Why Don't He Do It.

When the farmer knows that a gate is better, and, as a time and-labor-saving fixture, cheaper than a set of bars and posts, and without calling on a carpenter he can himself make one, Why don't he do it?

When he has no other fastenings to his gates and barn doors than a stone rolled against them, and in a single evening after supper, is able to make a better one, Why don't he do it?

Or, when he sees the boards dropping from his barns and out-buildings, and like heaps of rubbish lying in piles about the premises, and need only nailing on again, Why don't he do it?

Or if he is afraid of the expense of nails, and is always crying up the maxim of Dr. Franklin, to "save the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves," and he knows that the same Dr. Franklin also said that "many men are penny wise and pound foolish," and he is not careful to think of the precept contained in the latter, Why don't he do it?

If it is a saving of nearly half the manure of a farmer's stock by keeping them shut up in yards, instead of running at large through most of the winter, Why don't he do it?

If he knows that many of his fields would be greatly improved by ditching, and by the removal of large stumps and stones, Why don't he do it?

And when he knows that his pastures would yield nearly double the feed, and of a better quality if the bushes were all cut and subdued, Why don't he do it?

And if he can add fifty per cent. to the product of his clover-fields, and even his pastures, by the use of gypsum (plaster,) Why don't he do it?

[Because he is too infernally "shiftless and lazy."]

Provincial Parliament.

From the Globe.

House of Assembly.

Quebec, April 30.

Yesterday the bill to incorporate the Assumption River Railroad was read the 3rd time and passed.

The order of the day for the 3rd reading of the bill to prevent traffic in intoxicating liquors was read. Objections made that it related to trade, and ought to have originated in committee of whole House. Speaker stated that by the rules of the house in unprovided cases the rules of the Parliament of Great Britain should be followed, and that the standing order of the committees of England enacted that bills relating to trade or the laws concerning trade be not brought into the House until the the proposition should have been first considered in a committee of the whole House. As his duty was to declare what the rule was, he decided that the bill before the House regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, came within the meeting of the standing order.

Objection having been made to the Speaker's decision,

The House divided—yeas, 52; nays 45.

On motion of Mr. Felton, the said order of the day was then discharged, and the bill withdrawn.

The bill to extend the Act to provide for the Courts of Superior Jurisdiction in Upper Canada, was read a third time, and passed.

The bill to incorporate the Canada, Newfoundland and Marine Telegraph Company was read a third time.

Some other unimportant business was done and the House adjourned.

Quebec, May 1.

To-day Mr. Cayley moved the House into committee on certain resolutions declaring the expediency of making a grant of £900,000 sterling to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to be hereafter returned. The debate was proceeding when the report left.

The Failure to Appear Last Week.

In consequence of an accident happening to our first page, last week, the friends and patrons of this paper did not receive the usual number. We regret the failure exceedingly, but it could not be helped. In the hurry of moving the office to the place named elsewhere, matter intended for that number, and which had it been saved, would have prevented a break in the issues, was accidentally "pied" by an unusually careful and trustworthy lad, so that the paper has to rely upon the indulgence of those to whom this statement is made, to arrest their impatience or indignation at the delay.

The "Colonist" and the Fugitives.

We understand that some of our coloured friends are annoyed, because we said recently that fugitive slaves were not the most desirable of settlers. Our meaning we thought was obvious enough, namely, that men of that class are usually too ignorant and too brutally trained to make good citizens. Were the fugitives men of intelligence and industrious habits, we should be glad to receive them amongst us, without once enquiring what was their colour.—Colonist.

The paragraph to which allusion is made in the above, will be found in the communication of "A Descendant of the African Race."

We do not see that the explanation hereunto appended makes the matter any better, but rather that insult in this instance has been added to the injury done the fugitives in the former paper.

It is to be supposed that the writer is either a friend or an enemy, that he either knows what he says of them to be true, or he does not. If an enemy, why attach any importance to the manner in which "colored friends" may understand it? It would be better to be like Mr. Larwill, at once, and care not a fig for the "monkeys," or Gordon Bennett, John Mitchell, and other equally good society of the States, and wish for or get a plantation South. Should the Colonist be a friend, the fugitives will say—save us from such friends, as they are constrained to do when evidences of hostility are less apparent!

Should this writer for the Colonist know his statements respecting their laziness, brutality, and the conclusions he draws therefrom to be correct, we venture the assertion that he is alone in his knowledge; for no respectable and intelligent man who knows anything about them, will charge them as a class with lack of industry, with being bad citizens, or with being hopelessly ignorant and brutified, notwithstanding the brutal treatment received by them when in slavery.

There is no question with sensible men about the capacities of fugitives: they number too many thousands in these Provinces, and give too much evidence of their worth, as subjects, to leave a doubt as to their perfect fitness to be received; had the Colonist been in doubt on this point, he had only to refer to that well known organ of his sympathiser, the member for Kent, the Chatham Planet, and learn from it whining and despairing statements, in which these said fugitives, with their free colored brethren, are charged with wresting the lands from the less enterprising Canadian of his own class, not by force of laziness, ignorance, and brutality, but by means of ready and tempting pounds. Or were he disposed to look about home a little, many facts would come to his knowledge of that class of the colored people that would falsify his bold assertions. Should he be ignorant of the true character of these men, why attempt to be "smart" upon a matter about which he is a knownothing? It would have been far better to have said nothing. But the Colonist is a conservator of political morality; knows, or pretends to know, what every one, emigrant or native-born subject is entitled to, by the British Constitution and the laws of Parliament—a sort of dictator in these matters—can adjust their application so exactly as to reach and reject, in consequence of the hue of the skin, or the former involuntary condition of those who would be men. "Were the fugitives, &c., "we should be glad to receive them." And who is we, not the liberal-minded and Christian people of the British Empire, but the Colonist, a paper either immeasurably conceited, stupid, or despotic. Were some thousands of Southern slaveholders to emigrate to Canada from the States of the South, with hearts black with wickedness, but pockets filled with the unpaid gold belonging to fugitive slaves, would the Colonist take such sudden fright? or do the rowdies and other doubtful characters who come in by hundreds from the lowest purlieus and dens of the northern cities, steeped in crime, excite the Colonist to "make a sentiment" against such emigrants? Nothing of the sort; a few black men and women—say dozens in a week, have fled from their Christian oppressors, and straightway the very best assurances the Colonist can give that it is right with the masters are made. What does its "utter abhorrence of slavery in every shape" amount to, in its issue of the 3rd inst., when we are told in the next breath that "in a few exceptional cases it (slavery) may render him (the slave) both happier and wiser." This Colonist would rather far the slave would not come here; he is too brutal to be a good citizen, so he had better remain in slavery; this system the Colonist so thoroughly hates, and which calls for "the direct vengeance of offended heaven." The Colonist is a Christian paper, we had forgotten that. Like similar Journals of the other side, it can be pious occasionally; it has, no doubt, a great regard for the souls of the brutified "negroes," for the slave's sake, but would carefully preserve their bodies to the masters; its expressed horror of slavery is not inconsistent with such a view—"devilish pious!"—ready to get down before the Yankees ask it—makes haste to condemn what has not been contemplated, a "fillibustering crusade against their 'peculiar institutions.'" Northerners, who pursue the course the Colonist does, get paid back in Southern contempt; perhaps the Colonist works "free gratis for nothing." But "friend" Colonist, humble as are the colored people of Canada, and as all-powerful as is "we," the Colonist, they are not at all frightened at your "ukase;" whatever the fugitive was in the States, he is a man here, recognized by the truly Christian and noble ones of the country, and his more fortunate fellow-emigrant of the same origin. Those like him will continue to come; for God directs him, good men help him, and liberty and the people of this noble land invite him; we wish you were of the number.

How much better it would appear were your Christianity and philanthropy of the sort that would do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you, instead of leaving as it does the impression that with you men might—

"Rob old Tony, Doll, and Sam,
Of human rights and bread and ham,
And still love heavenly union."

Employment of Colored Persons.

Rev. S. R. Ward, now in England, is writing a series of articles for Fred. Douglass' Paper, headed "Modern Negro," in which he makes some bitter complaints about Quaker and Garrisonian Abolitionists never giving Negroes employment. In one of these articles he asks and answers the following questions:—

"They raise a negro boy to a clerkship? or put him in a profession? or fit him for anything more than a drudge? Never!"

Such points, according to our notions of things, are in decidedly bad taste, and designed to do great injury to the young colored reader. It will teach him to despise hardy toil as a means of livelihood, and prompt him to ape the follies of the whites. The black man, if he desires to become respected, and gain an honest livelihood, should aspire to something higher than a mere "clerkship," or to get "in a profession," in both of which avocations the supply is already greater than the demand; and if the duties incumbent on either station are not drudgery, then we mistake the meaning of the word. We are surprised to learn that a leading colored man, possessing as much good sense as Samuel R. Ward usually displays, should hold out the idea that a "clerkship" or a "profession" should be the acme of the colored man's ambition. Far better would it be for the free colored population of the State of New York, if they would divest themselves of their high notions of "genteel employment" in cities and villages—fly to the forests of the fertile West—and there expend their energies in cultivating the soil—by far the noblest and most independent occupation the country affords. There, by honesty and industry, he can earn himself a home, and laugh at the silly prejudice entertained by his city-bred friends against color. If he has no taste for agricultural pursuits, let him seize the trowel of the mason—the adze of the carpenter—the sledge of the blacksmith—the type of the printer, or the axe of the wood cutter;—and if perseverance and industry, (without which no man, be he black or white, can attain an honorable position in society) mark his career, he will soon feel himself independent of all the "profesions" and "clerkships" under heaven. Of course, we would not debar a colored man from any position, if his talents or inclination were such as to suit the profession of his choice; but we would advise colored men to cease whining about becoming lawyers, doctors, clerks, ministers, and other "genteel" men, and go to work.

—Ward insults the intelligence and energy of his race, when he talks about others "raising a negro boy to a clerkship, or putting him in a profession." The expression implies that they are incapacitated to "raise" themselves, which is not a fact by any means. The Yankee boy never asks others to "raise" him. He commences uncomplainingly, at the bottom of the ladder of life, even if he is a "drudge" at first, and by his indomitable will "raises" himself. If he wishes to be "put in a profession," he never goes begging around some generous souled philanthropist for the means to effect his object; but he goes assiduously to work, and the harder the knocks he receives, the more his character is strengthened—thus when the station is attained, he is the more suited to fill it. In dotting down these impressions, we are not at all unmindful of the unjust prejudice which the colored man is obliged to surmount. We are aware of the bitter feelings against color, existing among the white population. Those prejudices are deep seated, and cannot be obliterated in an hour; nor a day, nor a year. Time will accomplish the object. But we believe that the sooner the colored population become an agricultural people, the sooner will the minds of the whites become emancipated from that stern master—Prejudice.

REMARKS.

Many thanks, friend of the Free Press, for your manly words. Yours are the sentiments that obtain with the true workers among the colored people, and we are rejoiced to know that any of their true friends have the daring to give them utterance, and so strengthen the feeble efforts of the earnest and progressive ones amongst us. It was easy for you to utter them, doubtless, but we know how herculean is the task to have the susceptible youth amongst us appreciate them, in view of the everlasting twaddle about lawyers, doctors, professors, indulged in by many of those self-called "prominent" colored men, who are everlastingly growling at, hating, or toasting one another, except, when peacock-like, they call public attention to their individual merits, and high importance, in most notable cases having for their basis noisy parade, slavery, a questionable origin to boast of, however much we must pity it, and a most necessary amount of puff. The constant whirr and din about status, "position," gentlemanship, and influence, have so addled the brains of our young people, in both countries, in many cases—and hoary headed men also—so many brilliant moths and "wandering stars" infest us, that the weightier matters of life are despised by the majority, a gilded but empty fame is coveted and sought for through occupations and positions the most uncertain and insubstantial in our case, when sought or entered into to the exclusion of business, more in keeping with our present state of progress. Better far could our people understand it to have a class of sensible industrious wood-sawyers, than of conceited poverty-starved lawyers, superficial professors, or conceited quacks, if we must establish lines of preference.

Again we thank brother Cole for his timely word, in favour of a course worthy of men. We are curious to know if among those devoted to "black manity," many others are to be found brave enough to speak what they believe on the point. The honest laborers among us would despair in their efforts to promote right views, were it not that they know that truth must pervail.

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Mr. J. N. Still intends exhibiting views of scenes in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," shortly, and while on his tour will visit this place. The Citizens will be amply repaid for patronizing him.

Mr. Still is a man of acknowledged talent, great force of character, altogether one of the most sensible and influential of the colored Americans, who are really trying to elevate themselves and their brethren. By his skilful management, the subject will be invested with an interest not to be imparted by the thousand and-one-Uncle Tom murderers who perambulate the country.

☞ Mr. Ball's splendid Panoramic Views of the principal cities West and South, is now on exhibition in New England. We hope they will visit Canada.

Mr. Wm. Wells Brown, the Lecturer.

There is a possibility that Mr. Wm. Wells Brown may visit Canada at no distant day. Mr. Brown is thought by men of sound judgment, to be the most powerful speaker among the anti-slavery colored men of the States. He does not confine his lectures exclusively to the important subject of slavery. During five years residence in England, and since his return to America, he has lectured on a greater variety of subjects, before societies, lyceums, and promiscuous audiences, than any other of the men of his class. Should Mr. Brown come to Canada people could not pay a more deserved respect to an able and an earnest worker, than they would have the opportunity of doing, by getting up meetings of the citizens generally, and otherwise welcoming him.

Notice.

The Committee appointed to make inquiries relating to the Dawn Institute, are requested to meet at the house of Mr. T. Smallwood, York Street, on Monday Evening next, at half past Seven o'clock.

By order of the Chairman.

Correspondence.

For the Provincial Freeman.

Toronto, April 27th, 1855.

Dear Madame,—I had nearly finished No. IV., on the discussion of the merits of the two political parties in this Province, in order to arrive at a safe solution of the important question as to which the people of color should give their united support; I confess that in the course of the examination, from the evidences I thought I had, my leanings were toward the Conservative party; but I was brought to a pause on opening the Colonist of this morning, the great Conservative organ of this City, by finding the following article therein contained:—

"Large numbers of slaves continue to escape into Canada daily from the United States. One of the Detroit papers tells us that on the 15th inst., no less than eighteen of them crossed the river into Canada. We fear they are coming rather too fast for the good of the Province. People may talk about the horrors of slavery as much as they choose; but fugitive slaves are by no means a desirable class of immigrants for Canada, especially when they come in great numbers."

The tyranny and partiality exhibited in the above, is only equalled by those despots from whom those slaves escaped. I suppose the Colonist would set aside the liberal British laws under which we live, and introduce the fugitive slave law to meet its case. The Colonist has just as good grounds to object to parties from other quarters, who are as ignorant and as depraved, to say the least, (of whom thousands are annually landed on our shores,) as the fugitive slaves from the States. The conductors of the Colonist need not think that the colored people of this Province are going to be crushed beneath their mammoth sheet, and submit to their insults without a struggle. The Colonist is again at home on its old ground. By-the-way, however, it may be some consolation to the writer of this article, if I inform him that those fugitives, who give him so much anxiety, have many brethren who have preceded them, and many who will yet come that will compare with him, whether for intelligence, respectability, or wealth, notwithstanding his hue-and-cry to the contrary.

A Descendant of the African Race.

To the Editor of the Provincial Freeman:

Madam:—Knowing you to be interested in whatever relates to our welfare, I take great pleasure in sending you items from this part of the Province. There have been a great many arrivals by the Underground Railroad at this place, lately; within the last two weeks, thirty-nine have crossed over—fourteen came under the protection of the "old Engineer."

There is quite a commotion at the Fugitive Home at present. The settlers say that the lots that Mr. Bibb sold to them, Mr. Foote is now asking them to pay $20 more upon. The Constitution has been altered again, and with restrictions more severe than before. The clause requiring them to clear up five acres in three years, has been changed to two years—the settlers are also required to build larger houses as a condition of settlement. The discontent is becoming general, on a settlement where but little contentment prevails at any time. The old clothes flow in as usual, by box, barrel, and dray. Mr. Foote has had a depository here, in the village, and from thence they are taken, (as well by cart direct from the landing,) to the Home, and in some instances, lazy-bones accept them here. The small-pox was at the Home this winter. Education was suspended, and death was in the Bush. It is the opinion of some, that it came in old clothes, as it did at Dawn some years ago, and at St. Catherines, and from which fugitives died. I have spoken of Foote as the great old clothes agent for this section, which no respectable one hereabouts will deny, and yet I know the danger I am in when daring to write about something that is done openly—and something that we all know is a curse to us—yes the introduction of fugitive clothes is a curse, and every sensible man knows it, and says so, and yet in spite of that, Mr. Foote brings them in by the load—runs around, bundle in hand, or gives to this and takes away from that one, especially money given for other purposes, as was done last winter, and by his actions seems to defy people to speak.

What must we do? This Foote is a preacher, and is well paid, I learn from good authority, by the Home Society in Detroit, $500 a year. We are British subjects, I among others, though once a fugitive, am a voter; and yet these meddlesome Yankees make our adopted country to stink in our nostrils. "In my next, should space be allowed to me by you, I will give an account of this flourishing place, with a notice of some of our business men."

Prohibitory Liquor Bill—Suffrage—Correspondents.

Philadelphia, April 18th, 1855.

The Prohibition Bill, so greatly needed—to the honor of the Legislative, and the joy of many thousands of the inhabitants of Pennsylvania, be it said, has passed and been signed by the Governor. In all probability, therefore, on the arrival of the 1st day of next October, when it is to go into effect, both friends and foes will have the chance of witnessing its operation. In the interval, doubtless, the votaries of intemperance and disorder will spare no pains in devising schemes to defeat its purposes, or to evade its penalties: indeed already they are beginning to rally their forces, preparing for the issue. Of them it may be truly said, they are legion, and most likely will behave about as fractiously as the man spoken of in the Gospel, out of whom the "devils" were "cast;" or the "swine" into whom they "entered." Men who have all their days been allowed to draw on King Alcohol, at pleasure, under all circumstances, regardless of evils resulting therefrom, in all probability will feel as though they will find it difficult to steer through life soberly.

Judging from the large and influential members who are either intemperate, or who are peculiarly interested in the liquor "business," in some way or other, it is not unreasonable to suppose that it will be morally impossible to carry out the Prohibition Measure, in all its requirements—incalculable will be its benefits, however, if one half of its design should be accomplished.

For two Sabbath's past, by a Proclamation of the Mayor of Philadelphia, and in accordance with an act of the Assembly, the "Sunday Liquor Law" has been in full force; the influence of which has been decidedly healthful. As one passes through the streets where formerly the Tavern, Grog Shops, &c., were kept constantly open, inviting the young and old—where disorder and dissipation ever had been witnessed, it is now, under the new arrangement, quite a different spectacle, all these nefarious places being closed. If any gain access, it has to be done under the utmost disguise and fear of the authorities; consequently, a very large proportion, at least, will have to forego the pleasure of having their vicious appetites indulged.

At a time like the present, when many are complaining of "hard times," flour from $12 to $14 per barrel, beef from 12 to 18 cents per lb., potatoes $2 per bushel, with all other necessaries in the eating line equally high, how men can complain of the removal or prevention of one of the chief sources of evils and expenditure, is very strange.

Rarely has the question respecting the rights of the colored man been alluded to in the Legislature, this session; and it now seems quite clear that they will not trouble themselves to look in his direction, while they can find Rail Roads, Plank Roads, Banking Institutions, &c., &c., to contend for. It was hoped by many of the colored people and their friends, that this session would do something towards restoring to them the right of suffrage, from which for many years they have been debarred; but with the exception of receiving a few petitions and of allowing a bill to be offered on the subject, I am not in posession of the fact that any thing else especially, has been gained in the matter. Of course, Pensylvania is peculiarly situated, geographically, commercially, and politically—being under the immediate eye and domination of the South. Hence, with two exceptions, Illinois and Indiana, Pensylvania is notoriously the most pro-slavery State this side of Mason and Dixon's line.

In conclusion, I have a few remarks to make respecting the delinquencies of some of our Canadian friends, which I trust will be received kindly by all concerned.

We have heard much of the enterprise, intelligence, and moral worth of not a few of the colored citizens of different parts of Canada West, especially about Chatham, London, Hamilton, St. Catherines, Toronto, &c., &c., accordingly we had hoped to hear frequently, through the columns of the Provincial Freeman, of what might be transpiring of an interesting nature to our people, or the country at large, from various correspondents belonging to the localities alluded to. True, from now and then one, the Freeman has contained very interesting communications, doubting not the ability of others to use their pen to advantage and instruction. I will therefore take the liberty to suggest that it would add much to the interest of the Freeman and the gratification of its readers, if others would avail themselves of its columns, to impart light and wisdom to its patrons.

The masses of our people need improvement! education! knowledge! With but limited chances, where can they look with more hope than to the press? It is the grand instrumentality, in the hands of the American nation, through which they achieve all their revolutions, either for good or evil—indeed no sane white man, or party of men, in this country, would for a moment attempt or hope to accomplish any public change without the aid of the press! How is it then that the great majority of colored men can be indifferent with regard to enterprises, which, with their co-operation, would be of the utmost advantage to themselves? These latter remarks, however, are more appropriate to the free colored people of this country than to Canadians, I presume—in fact it is too much the case every where. It ought not so to be.

United States.

From the New Orleans Delta, April 12.

A White Woman Suing for Her Freedom.

A Suit was yesterday filed in the Sixth District Court on behalf of Josephine Smith, alias Barret, in which the allegations are as follows:

That she is wrongfully and illegally clamed as a slave by Lionel C. Levy, whose residence is in the City of New Orleans, and by Joseph Cohen, who resides at Charleston, S. C.

That petitioner (if even she was a slave, which she does not admit, but calls for proof thereof) has become free, or entitled to claim her freedom by that express provision of the law of Louisiana which declares that "if a master suffer his slave to enjoy his liberty for ten years, he shall lose all right of action to recover possession of such slave, who thereby becomes free."

Now, petitioner alleges that she is claimed as a slave, under an alleged purchase of her made at the succession sale of the late Judah Barrett, of this city, in which it is claimed that she was bid off by and sold to said Levy, as being the property of said succession.

She further alleges that when she lived in the house of said Barrett, she lived there as a free white member of his family, and that said Barrett, then, and at all other times, treated her and presented her to the world as his own daughter, and as being both free and white.

Petitioner further alleges that she has always associated with white persons, and has been considered a free white person; that she was educated as a free white person, at both English and French schools, where none but white children were knowingly admitted; that the said Barrett recognised her, in various ways and at all times from her childhood to his death, as free and white, and used to take her to the public theatre and seat her with himself in the dress circle, where none but white persons were knowingly admitted.

Petitioner further alleges that she so enjoyed her liberty and passed for a free white person for more than ten years next preceding the date of said Barrett's death, and in fact never was at any time restrained of her liberty; that for several years preceding said Barrett's death, she ceased to reside at his house; that since ceasing to reside there, she has bought and sold property in her own name, has sued and been sued in the Courts of this State, and has done various other acts inconsistent with a state of Slavery—all of which was done with the knowledge of said Barrett.

Petitioner further alleges that she is uncertain who it is that claims her as their slave; that as far as her attorney can trace the pretended title, it seems to stand in the name of said Levy, but she understands that said Jacob Cohen claims to own or have an interest in her. She further represents that the said Levy well knows, and knew at the time he bid her off at said pretended sale, and the said Cohen also did then well know all the facts aforesaid, and that petitioner was and is a free person, or entitled to claim her freedom; yet, notwithstanding such facts, the said Levy and Cohen persisted in the said pretended purchase, and still persist, in claiming her as a slave; that, by their said legal and tortuous acts, they have compelled petitioner to flee from her residence and absent herself from her family and friends, and have injured her in her feelings and reputation, and have subjected her to troubles and expenses, and thereby damaged her to the amount of $2,000. Whereupon, petitioner prays that said Levy and Cohen be cited to answer thereto, and that, after due proceedings had, judgment be rendered in favour of the petitioner, decreeing her to be a free person, or entitled to her freedom against all persons, and that judgment be further rendered in her favour against said Levy and said Cohen for the sum of $2,000 damages as aforesaid, and for such other and further decree as may seem proper in the premises, with costs of suit and all general relief.

We understand that the plaintiff is now in Canada, and that she brings this suit in order, if possible, to obtain permission to return to this city.

Murder of a Negro.—We learn from the Yorkville (S.C.) Enquirer, that a negro boy by the name of Andrew, belonging to Richard E. Kennedy, and who was hired to a young man by the name of Bell, was killed by the latter on Friday before last. It appears that the boy had run away, and when caught by Bell, he was whipped and beaten so unmercifully that his death ensued.

A NEGRO SHOT BY A WHITE BOY FOR PREFERRING TO PLAY WITH A CAT, RATHER THAN WITH HIM.—On Sunday morning last, about 10 o'clock, the citizens of Gaston were thrown into a high state of excitemnt, caused by a white boy, named Robert Frasier, shooting a negro boy belonging to Dr. Clemens of that place. The negro boy was playing with a cat, amusing himself in an innocent way, when this youth told the negro to leave the cat and play with him. The negro, not obeying this youth's command, turned round with his face to Frasier, and as he turned, Fraiser fired at him with his gun, the whole lodging in the negro boy's mouth, tearing part of his nose off, knocking out two or three of his teeth, and injuring him very much. Medical assistance was promptly rendered by the owner of the boy. Young Frasier was arrested, but admitted on bail.—Petersburg (Va.,) Intelligencer, April 17.

JOHN MITCHELL, the Irish exile, seems to be a favourite at the South. He is well received in the Southern cities wherever he goes, and has been invited to deliver addresses at a number of places. Among these is an invitation to deliver the commencement address before the two literary societies of the Mississippi University, at Oxford.—Exchange Paper.

AN IRISH NOBLE.—An Irish laborer walked three miles, Monday evening, to procure a lantern and flag to warn an approaching train, on the Western Railroad, near Washington, of a danger in a broken rail. "The passengers made up a handsome purse for the faithful fellow whose exertion had saved them from an awful catastrophe," and they did this notwithstanding the "land of his birth."

A NOVELTY.—Mrs. Webb, whose dramatic readings, to a private audience, we alluded in last week's paper, is a young colored woman. The statement of this fact, may increase the anxiety many have expressed to know and hear more of her. We state the fact now as a novelty, and will add that some of our best critics speak in the highest terms of her reading. She gave a public reading at the Assembly Buildings, on Thursday evening last, but as our paper was made up before that time, we must defer any notice until our next.—Woman's Advocate.

THE SAILOR'S LAST LETTER.—The Barnstable Patriot says that about ten days since, Mr. David Kelley, of Centreville, found a bottle in that harbor, at low water mark, which contained a paper on which was written the following:

"Here I am on the wreck of the Esther Swift, expecting every minute to go down. I throw this box into the sea, so that if any one finds it, they will please send it to Alexander Osborn, New Haven. Good-by to the world, and good-bye dear father and mother, and dear sister. From your son and brother,

WM. H. OSBORN.

Good-bye forever, I pray I may meet you in heaven if not on earth.

The Esther Swift belonged in New Haven, and has been engaged in freighting to the West Indies.

Provincial.

Emigration to Canada.

The annual report of A. C. Buchanan, Esq., Chief Emigration, Agent has been printed by order of the Legislative Assembly. Useful and interesting information may be gleaned from it. It states that the number of emigrants last year exceeds that of any other, excepting 1847. The total number landed at Quebec was 53,183, as follows:—

No. from England,	18,175
" Ireland,	16,168
" Scotland,	6,336
" Germany,	5,688
" Norway,	5,849
" New Brunswick, " Nova Scotia,	857
Total,	53,183

The number from England nearly doubles that of 1853, being equal to 90 per cent. From Ireland the increase has been only 1,297, or 12¼ per cent over the previous year. From Scotland equal to nearly 36 per cent. From Germany over 137 per cent. Norway 15¼ per cent., and from the Lower Provinces 73 per cent. At sea 487 deaths occurred, of whom 94 were infants; and 83 births. The excess of females over males only occurs in emigrants from Ireland, there being 2209 females more than males, nearly double that of the last year. For the past four years, 5,270 females have emigrated over the number of males. The number of vessels engaged was 386, employing 7,474 seamen. Among the 19,548 adult males, there were 3,195 tradesmen, a considerable increase in this class; farmers and farm servants 5,632; servants 117; clerks 156; and unskilled labourers 10,448. Among the tradesmen, the largest number were carpenters and joiners, there being 617; of tailors 433; of shoemakers 358; of smiths 354; of bricklayers and stone masons 228; of miners 238, &c. 58 different Irish Poor Law Unions sent out 2,963 persons, and the landing money they received at Quebec amounted to £3,271 sterling. The expenses of the Emigration Department, including the Quarentine Establishment, amounts to £16,915, showing an increase over that of 1853 of £7364. The emigrant tax amounted in the course of the past year to £11,772, and Imperial appropriation amounted to £1,825, making a total of £13,579, thus leaving a deficiency of the sum of expenditure, of £3,318, which has been met by a balance remaining from 1852. For the future no Imperial aid may be expended; and as there is now no balance in hand, the resources of next session will be exclusively dependent upon the sum derived from emigrant tax. Of the 53,183 emigrants landed in Quebec, 22,000 went to the United States, while 31,183 remained in Canada. Estimating the number that have come by the United States to Canada at 7000, Mr. Buchanan thinks that the total accession to our population during the year has been about 38,000 souls.

In the early part of the season, and throughout the summer months, the demand for all classes of laborers and mechanics was unprecedented, and the greatest difficulty was experienced throughout the country in securing the necessary supply.

A very considerable increase in Scotch and English farmers and agriculturists, possessing capital, was observed among the emigrants of the past season, which cannot but prove highly desirable and beneficial to the best interests of the country. The emigrants from Aberdeen and Hull, which show a large increase on former years, were chiefly of this class. There were also a number of respectable and wealthy Germans who have settled in the Western section of the Province. A small party of from 50 to 60 Norwegians have acquired some property in the Eastern townships, near Sherbrooke, and, from their steady and industrious habits, hopes are entertained of their proving a valuable acquisition to that important section of the Province. More of this class are expected, if those already settled should succeed.

From a return of the emigration to the port of New York, it would appear that 313,747 arrived there during the year 1854, being an increase of over 30,000 on the emigration of 1853. The emigration from the United Kingdom shows a decrease of 32,731 when compared with that of 1853. From Ireland a falling off of upwards of 34,000. From Scotland 1,600, whilst there appears to have been an increase of over 3000 on the number from England. But the great increase appears to have been in the German emigration, which shows an excess of over 47,000 on the number in 1853.—Globe.

☞ Telegraph advices from Oswego, of April 16, say that large quantities of produce and lumber are constantly arriving there from Canada, exhibiting the effects of the Reciprocity. Since the opening of navigation, the arrivals at that port foot up 60,000 barrels of flour, 110,000 bushels wheat and nearly 500,000 feet lumber. Immense freight trains are transporting these products to the interior, and to the city of New York.—Globe.

The Militia Bill.

The following from the Prescott Telegraph is a sample of the opinions of the Reform press on the Militia bill. Not one is found to say a word for it:—

"This obnoxious bill has passed the assembly by the aid of several renegade reformers. 25 Upper Canadian members voted for the above resolution, and 24 against it. Among the yeas we are sorry to see the name of Dr. C. Church, the chance member for North Leeds. This vote will be remembered by Dr. C.'s constituents when he shows his face before them for re-election. And Mr. Jesse Delong, he must run away from his post. What contemptible pusillanimity! He'll cut a pretty figure at the next election. We venture to say, looking to the future, that no measure ever passed by our Parliament will entail such oppression, and unnecessary expense upon the country as this. Every reformer, or pretended reformer, who supported the bill ought to be denounced by his constituents. Within five years it will cost the Province £100,000 per year to keep up the militia establishments, for no earthly use but to absorb the surplus revenue, and extend the patronage of an unscrupulous Government."

Melancholy Case of Poisoning—Warning to Housekeepers.

We regret to hear that a most serious accident occurred lately in the family of a Mr. Fares, in the township of Crowland.

It appears that the family, as is the case with most farmers, are in the habit of keeping their apple sauce or apple-butter, as the Germans call it, in the common earthen crocks made at the potteries in different places in the country.

These crocks are all "glazed" inside with a substance which when properly put on, is perfectly hard and smooth—but nevertheless composed of ingredients extremely poisonous.

In the instance referred to, the acid of the fruit had removed the "glazing," and it became incorporated with the sauce, which, without being aware of the fact, was partaken of by several persons in the house, resulting in the death of two of Mr. Fares' children, and a servant boy lately out from Scotland.—Haldimand Independent.

ACCIDENTS.—Several fatal accidents have occurred on the ice, between Montreal and Longueuil. On Monday afternoon, Mr. Sanderson, late of the firm of Sanderson and Murray & Co., while crossing on foot, at the time the ice was shoving fell down dead. Fatigue and over-excitement acting upon organic disease supposed to be the cause. A blacksmith by the name of Hancox working for the G. T. Company was drowned, and there is a report that another man had both legs broken, by being jammed in the ice.—Montreal Advertiser.

MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR.—On Saturday last, human bones were discovered in the middle of the road, opposite the school-house, at Ballyduff, in Manvers. It appears that when the thaw had set fairly in, the water running down the road had worked its way through the gravel, to the depth of three feet, which uncovered the human remains, and hence the discovery. About four years ago, a schoolmaster was missing from that neighbourhood, and nothing was ever heard of him. He came to Port Hope to receive a sum of money, and that was the last information that could be obtained, and it very probable that these were his remains.—Port Hope Ensign.

☞ A man named Boyd, a carpenter, fell out with one of his fellow workmen on Monday last, at a building in the course of erection on Adelaide Street. After a lengthy scuffle, Boyd's opponent struck him a severe blow on the skull, and he fell senseless. He now lies in the Hospital in a very precarious state. A portion of the skull has been removed.

A young lad named O'Neil, was accidentally drowned in Brock Street, by falling into a well, from which he was drawing water. Coroner Duggan held an inquest on the body, and the Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death," and censured the careless manner in which the well was left without a guard.—Colonist.

AN ANECDOTE OF MISS NIGHTINGALE.—One hundred and fifty two invalids arrived at Chatham, on Saturday, from the Crimea. Many of the cavalry soldiers show the effect of severe sabre wounds received at the grand charge at Balaklava. They all speak in the very highest and grateful terms of Miss Nightingale, and relate an anecdote of that good lady, as they name her, which saved the lives of many of them. A considerable quantity of invalids arrived at Scutari from the Crimea in a very bad state, and bedding and other articles were demanded from the person known as storekeeper, who, when applied to for the articles refused to deliver them without a written order from the head of his department. Miss Nightingale, seeing the emergency of the case and the necessity of immediate attention to the invalids, offered to make good the articles required if they were disallowed. The storekeeper would not yield, although Miss Nightingale said, if he was so exact many of the men would be dead before the order could arrive. Miss Nightingale, finding anything she could say to the storekeeper of no avail, left him, and addressed herself to a few of the stoutest of the men to break open the door of the store, which they soon effected, and with her own hands she served out what was required, telling the storekeeper, who was looking on with the key in his hand that she alone was responsible for what had been done.

THE PHYSICIAN OF NICHOLAS.—A letter from St. Petersburgh says Dr. MONT, homœpathic physician to the late Emperor, has left Russia in great haste and secretly. He is reproached with having too long concealed from the august deceased that his lung was attacked; also with having himself prepared the medicines destined for the Emperor, instead of having them prepared by a druggist. Great irritation was manifested against him at St. Petersburgh, and the Emperor ALEXANDER, himself, advised him, it is said, to leave Russia.

Mrs. Nicol, formerly Miss Bronte, known to the literary world as "Currer Bell," author of "Jane Eyre," "Shirley" and "Villette," lately died at Haworth, Yorkshire. So another star has set in darkness.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

JOHN J. E. LINTON.

Stratford, C. W., March 20, 1855. 8

CAUTION!!!

FROM information received from reliable sources, we learn that parties are at present in Toronto, endeavouring to induce colored persons to go to the States in their employ as servants. From the character of the propositions, there is reason to believe that "foul play" is intended, Possibly, that Constable Pope's designs on the fugitives and others are being carried out.

Individuals have proposed to women to go to Detroit to live in their service, and another party under circumstances of great suspicion, to a boy to go as far South as Philadelphia. We say to our people, listen to no flattering proposals of the sort. You are in Canada, and let no misplaced confidence in this or the other smooth-tongued Yankee, or British subject either, who may be mercenary enough to ensnare you into bondage by collusion with kidnappers in the States, deprive you of your liberty.

Many free colored persons—men, women, and children, are annually sold into hopeless slavery from having been kidnapped, or by arrangement made with the victims themselves to enter service at a distance from their homes. From travellers South, we hear of kidnapped children from Philadelphia and other cities in the slave pens of Baltimore and other slave-trading towns. Read the captivity of Solomon Northrup, a free man, who entered into just such an arrangementas colored citizens of Toronto are now asked to do, and who has to lament 12 years of captivity, from which his release was more improbable than its continuance; and all the result of listening to fair offers of excellent pay and easy position from rogues.

This everlasting going whining after the flesh pots—this going to the States during the summer to pick up the crumbs that fall from Yankee tables, though in a pecuniary point profitable for the time being, possibly, is on the whole most humiliating, if not, as we believe it to be, direct encouragement to those prowlers about of the Pope class to prosecute their nefarious business. Think of it men and women, who eschew a respectable life, of toil though it be, under this free government, to gain dollars in the United States at the expense of your and your children's liberties, by encouraging them to enter into a like course of pursuits, and so risk their freedom. Is there not enough of the love of liberty, and of manly dignity, to grapple with whatever difficulties may present themselves here, though toil and care attend your efforts, without forever running such risks for the small return of a few extra dollars?

We hope that this subject may receive the attention its importance demands, and that the people may be warned by preachers and the press of the dangers surrounding them.

Elected to serve during the present year:—

W. J. MACDONELL,—PRESIDENT;
P. J. O'NEILL,—VICE-PRESIDENT,
Messrs. S. G. LYNN, P. FOY, & Dr. HAYES,
BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, Esq.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations; which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards endoldraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings; and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends; and to ensure public confidence in the Institution; the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3. That the utmost publicity shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4. All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5. Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,
A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been associated with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The most liberal will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Planting, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We the undersigned, associate for the purpose of [illegible] the following Pledge:—

Believing the necessity of measures to further promote Literary Improvement, Active Benevolence, the Progress of Science, and a Brotherly Union, as essential to complete the enjoyments, and to the improvement of our present state, and to the progress of Her Majesty's subjects [illegible] possessed of the same rights, the same general characteristics and origin of the latter, we pledge [illegible] all in our power to our associates, to the promotion of this Union, and in our private and social intercourse, to promote a healthy literary and [illegible] spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. To encourage the Publication, Press or Presses, in Canada, which will stand on the watch-tower to notify the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, misrepresentations, &c., many in the United States and elsewhere, would carve a policy for emigrants, for they hold sentiments different from white emigrants who come, and to settle herein, by counselling the former to [illegible] personally to the Union, as if on a guest and [illegible] or to aggregate themselves into [illegible] communities or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the Dominion of Canada, thereby promoting the [illegible] that God's intellect, or color [illegible] communities, entitles them to either under the British Union or British American [illegible] as those of darker hue, to [illegible] hewers of wood and drawers of water' to those of a [illegible] complexion and [illegible] power to remove the stain of [illegible] from the face of the earth, and particularly as regards [illegible] of Great Britain to look upon [illegible] British American [illegible] tendencies, and [illegible] To encourage a spirit of [illegible] among the people, scientific, and [illegible] As a nucleus of operations, to support the Provincial Freeman, as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART II.—For the better Success of the above [illegible] Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretary, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d curly.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII. The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress," &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - -	per annum $ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid)

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,
A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

Poetry.

From the London Athenæum.

The Jewish Pilgrim.

Are these the ancient holy hills
Where angels walked of old?
Is this the land our story fills
With glory not yet cold?
For I have passed by many a shrine,
O'er many a land and sea,
But still, O! promised Palestine,
My dreams have been of thee,

I see thy mountain cedars green,
Thy valleys fresh and fair,
With summers bright as they have been,
When Israel's home was there;
Tho' o'er thee sword and time have pass'd,
And Cross and Crescent shone,
And heavily the chain hath prest,
But thou art still our own!

Thine are the wandering race that go
Unblest through every land,
Whose blood hath stained the polar snow,
And quenched the desert sand;
And thine the homeless hearts that turn
From all earth's shrines to thee,
With their lone faith for ages borne
In sleepless memory.

For thrones are fallen—nations gone,
Before the march of time,
And where the ocean rolled alone
Are forests in their prime,
Since Gentile ploughshares marred the brow
Of Zion's holy hill;—
Where are the Roman eagles now?
Yet Judah wanders still.

And hath she wandered thus in vain,
A pilgrim of the past?
No! long deferred her hope hath been,
But it shall come at last;
For in her wastes a voice I hear,
As from some prophet's urn,
It bids the nations build not there,
For Jacob shall return.

O! lost and loved Jerusalem!
Thy pilgrim may not stay,
To see the glad earth's harvest home
In thy redeeming day;
But now resigned in faith and trust,
I seek a nameless tomb,
At least beneath thy hallowed dust
O give the wanderer room.

Frome's Story.

Continued.

"I am of pure African blood," Freme said, "and though I have only a confused recollection of my parents and of my birth-place, I know that my father was a Chief. You may see I am of high caste, for I bear no scars of the tattoo on my face or person. Nor can I say to what tribe I belong. I can only remember as if I had had a dream a long time ago, that my father used to be always attended by a numerous company of warriors; that he wore the brightest-coloured plumes in his hair; and that one night our village was surprised, when a frightful and sanguinary conflict took place, which terminated in the discomfiture of my father, who was made prisoner, and borne away, with myself, to the Mozambique coast.

"We were sold to the Portuguese, who cribbed us up, with many others, in a baracoon, where we remained several months. At the end of that time, we, and some hundreds of our companions in misfortune, were disposed of to some foreign traders, and forced on board a vessel that was in waiting to receive us, a little way out at sea.

"I was, at first, stupefied with the misery and grief of being torn from my native soil. So long as we remained on it we seemed to cling to a hope of rescue; and notwithstanding my tender age, I shared the hopes of my companions. Well I remember, too, that when the ship began to move, and I saw the land receding from my view, I felt as though I had lost my mother a second time, and flung myself down on the deck to weep away my anguish.

"I do not know how the elder captives were treated. From the time they were thrust below, until their deliverance came, I never saw them. But sometimes, at dead of night, there used to be strange sounds on deck. The men would move up the gangways with heavy loads, which they would cast down on the planks, and presently there would be a loud splashing in the water, as though the load had been thrown overboard. I have often, in one night, counted off my two hands twice over, and sometimes thrice, each finger reckoning as a load, and wondering what the dreadful sounds meant. I know now. They were giving to the sea the poor creatures who had died in the day.

"We children—for there were many others besides myself—were permitted to run about on deck, in the day time, but as soon as the sun sank below the waves, we used to be huddled away all together into a dark cabin on deck and locked in. One morning, about a fortnight after we had been conveyed on board, I observed the captain looking very anxiously out towards where the sky and water seemed to meet, whilst the men, gathering in groups, gazed in the same direction, and spoke in low whispers, their countenances betraying great uneasiness. We had been many long days becalmed, the vessel rolling from side to side like a log on the glistening surface of the sea, and appearing quite stationary, though every sail was spread to catch the slightest puff of wind. I had noticed the captain and the crew appeared vexed at our making no progress, for they would frown and stamp, and mutter strange words; but, on the morning I am speaking of, they were in high glee, a breeze having sprung up in the night which sent the ship flying through the water like an arrow shot from a bow. It was towards the quarter from which the wind blew they were now looking, and my curiosity being roused, I strained my eyes in the same direction, but could see nothing save a small object that looked like a dot in the sky where the water met it.

"The breeze presently freshened, and then all was bustle on board to keep as much sail spread as possible, without endangering the ship. But the dot grew larger and larger, until it grew into a shape, and I then distinguished it to be another vessel, which was fast overtaking us. In vain did our captain crowd sail, and shift his course: the strange ship still gained upon us. All at once a blaze of fire shot from its side, followed in a few seconds by a loud roar, which had scarcely burst on our ears before a great ball of iron crashed into the side of our vessel, carrying away the cabin where we children used to lie at night.

"And now the captain held a consultation with his crew. Their faces wore a gloomy, despairing expression, and I could see there was great difference of opinion as to what should be done. Whilst they were conferring, another ball struck us, knocking off a great splinter of wood, which hit the captain, who fell dead. Upon this a white flag was run up, and our sails taken in, as a signal that we surrendered, and in a short time the stranger came alongside and took possession of us.

"The whole of the crew were conveyed on board the vessel that had captured us, and then my unfortunate companions were allowed to come on deck. I looked for my father amongst them, but he was not there: and then it was I understood what had taken place of a night when I heard those dreadful splashings.

"A very few days now brought us to this island, on reaching which we were handed over to the goverment officers.

"You may not have had the opportunity of observing, on the left bank of the river, at St. Denis, a picturesque spot called the Little Isle. It may be seen from the sea, as it is on a rising ground. The most beautiful shrubs and handsome trees grow there, from amidst which peep out several cabins covered with creeping plants, the whole nearly surrounding a pretty house, painted outside in various colours. It is to this place the slaves captured by the government cruisers are conveyed; and to it I was brought.

"I must say that we were all well treated. We had good food and raiment, and were well lodged. Every care was taken of us, those who were old enough being sent to learn a trade, or some kind of manual labour; so that, taking all circumstances into consideration, we had no reason to complain of our lot, and, indeed, we felt comparatively happy.

"In my own land I was called Coudjoupa, which means lion, or panther. When I fell into the hands of the Government it was changed to Freme. I was between six and seven years of age, and the master of the establishment, whose name was Bolvin, and who lived in the pretty house I have mentioned, took me into his own family, that I might play with and amuse his children.

"I was too young for grief to make a very profound impression upon me, let alone that the change in my position was so much for the better, that it tended much to distract my mind from dwelling on the past. I was naturally of a gay and lively disposition, and soon became a mighty favourite with my companions—two boys and a girl. We used to be always together, and were not happy when, by chance, one or the other was absent. I used to mimic the cries of all kinds of birds and animals to please my young friends, whose joys and troubles became mine; so that if one laughed we all laughed, or if one cried the others did the same. Oh! I was very happy! I grew up as one of the family, and though to teach a slave to read and write is prohibited by the law of the colony, I was permitted to be present when my young masters were receiving instruction, and to the astonishment of them all, I soon learnt to read and write as well as they. I have reason to believe that their father was displeased when this discovery was made, but as I began to be useful in assisting them with their lessons no further notice was taken, and I made rapid progress in the various elementary branches of knowledge.

"If, however, I studied for the pleasure of acquiring information," continued Freme, casting a look of affection on the young woman seated at his side, "I had another inducement, and that was to aid the little girl, whose play companion I was. I used to point her pencils, and mend her pens, as a part of my duty, and attend to all her wants. I would carry her, too, across puddles and through the bushes, when we were all out together on our juvenile rambles, and often, making her sit on my back, would crawl with her, on all-fours to amuse her."

"Freme, Freme," exclaimed the young woman, interrupting him; "our brother does not want to know all that."

"It is my history I am narrating," pursued Freme, casting his arm around her neck; "and I must tell the whole."

"Well," he resumed, "for all these trifling marks of attention, the little girl was very grateful, and used to give me more sweetmeats and caresses than to her own brothers. And thus we grew up together; the habit of seeing and playing with one another, and of loving one another too so innocently, gathered strength daily. But the time came when we were to part. Her brothers went away to France to complete their education, and I was obliged to select a trade, and to go to the colonial workshop to learn it. We were all four grieved to the heart by this separation, but the little girl felt it most acutely, for she had no playmate to enliven her solitude; no friend of her own age to speak to, or to share her troubles.

"I have since learnt that she now thought of poor Freme more and more, and of the trifling services he used to feel so happy in rendering her, as well as of the joyous hours they had passed together. And he, too, could not banish her from his mind. Her form was ever before his eyes, and her sweet smile seemed ever encouraging him to labour, and to try and be content.

"Yes!" he continued; "I could not forget her. Oh, what would I not have given, at this time, if I could have had the assurance given to me that I might devote my life to her, though I remained but a slave at her feet. How distracted were my thoughts, lest harm should befal her, and I not by to protect and save her. How great my grief when I reflected that she might fall ill; nay, might even die, and I never see her more. Nor saw I hope even of the slavery I sought in her service. There I was: removed to the colonial workshop, never, never again to approach her familiarly, as of old, or to serve my beloved young white mistress. Many and many a night have I repaired to my straw pallet, to think of her and to weep till morning broke.

"Nevertheless I make rapid progress in my trade as a carpenter, and as I applied myself to please, as well as to learn, I gave satisfaction to my superiors, who spoke well of me, allowed me many little privileges, and, as soon as I became old enough, gave me a cabin of my own to lodge in.

"As I grew to manhood, my mind dwelt more and more strongly on the young white companion of my childhood. I dwelt upon the happiness I had lost of being ever near her, and whenever I could do so unobserved, would steal furtively to her father's house, access to which was now interdicted to me—for what was I better than a slave—and keeping at a distance, would fix my eyes upon it, as though it were a temple where dwelt my guardian angel, whom I came to adore in secret. I have remained thus for hours, calling up her image as I had known her: first as a child with whom I had played; then as a sister whom I had waited upon and who had caressed me; and then as one who had been suddenly snatched from me, and an abyss placed between us, but whom, from the opposite side, and as if from an immeasurable distance, I beheld as a beautiful white girl, in whose presence I could not appear without trembling.

"Pardon me, brother," he added, addressing the Capre, "pardon me for dwelling on this part of my story. It is well, however, you should know all, for you will be the better able to judge how much I have to be thankful for in my present position."

The stranger, whose eyes were moist with starting tears, pressed Freme's hand and bade him continue.

THE HORSE.

The Hon. Zadock Pratt lately delivered a lecture on "The Horse," before the Mechanics' Institute of this city. It was a thoroughly practical discourse, and full of information. We make a few brief extracts from it as we find it reported in the Evening Express:

WHERE THE HORSE ORIGINATED.

Many conflicting opinions have been held as to the country in which this valuable animal originated, and two now have many adherents, all others having been given up. These two are Arabia and Egypt. For my own part, I am inclined to think that Egypt is undoubtedly entitled to the palm, and all investigation only confirms me in the belief. Without taking up your time with the arguments on either side, I will only say that the Sacred Scriptures, in describing the early stages of the world, mention the horse as being used in Egypt, while, in much more modern times, when Mohammed fought his battle in Arabia, there was not a single horse in the camp, proving their extreme scarcity, if not their total absence in the country.

ORIGIN OF AMERICAN HORSES.

With regard to the horses of America, we learn that large numbers were brought over by the early Spanish and English discoverers. The first were imported by Columbus, on his second voyage, in 1493. The first brought to any territory now belonging to the United States were landed in Florida, in 1527, by Cabaca de Vaca. They were allowed to run loose during the dissensions that followed, and multiplied to an almost incredible extent, especially in South America. Although the climate in South America would seem to be suitable for the proper development of the horse, as it is for cattle, yet he has never attained more than secondary importance. In large, wild herds they roam about, acting in admirable concert to oppose the attacks of wild beasts, who share the vast wilderness with them. Men have often fallen victims to their temerity in approaching them, and travellers have frequently found their own horses break away from restraint, and dash off to meet a body of their free companions, if they happen to meet them. The natives take them with the lasso, and only ride the horses, leaving the mares to run wild. They make no attempts to breed, but catch a horse when they need him, and break him to their use by the most violent measures. They never bring them to market, and it is said that a foreigner, who was once riding a mare, was so hooted at and pelted by the natives, that he narrowly escaped with his life.

The wild horses found in North America when the West was first explored, were more hardy; they were of Spanish extraction, and had been brought into use by the natives to a great extent, though many wild herds of immense numbers still roam freely over the prairies of our Western territories.

The race of horses which originated those now used in this country, and in Canada, were imported from various nations.

In 1609 one horse and six mares were brought to Virginia from England. In 1625 a few Dutch horses from Holland were imported into New Netherlands, now the State of New York. In 1604, M. L. Escabot brought the first horse into Canada and Nova Scotia, then known by the Indian name of Acadia. The first horse brought into Massachusetts was from England, and was imported by Francis Higginson, in 1529. In 1678 they existed in considerable numbers in Louisiana. The Indians on Red River, in Texas, used them in 1690. The early French settlers in Illinois, had them in considerable numbers in 1750.

STATISTICS.

In the present year, 1855, the number of horses may be set down at five millions worth, on the average, sixty dollars a piece, and valued in all at three hundred millions of dollars. The whole number of horned cattle is estimated at twenty millions, averaging twenty dollars, and valued at four hundred millions of dollars.

THE CANADIAN HORSE.

The Canadian horses are of French origin, and to this stock we are indebted for most of the trotting horses of the United States. It is a marked peculiarity of the Canadian horse that he always trots, as the Arabian horse always canters. Other breeds exhibit all the peculiarities of movement, including the trot, canter, and amble, but the Arabian horse never trots, and the Canadian rarely canters. Besides the trotting horse, we are indebted to Canada for many of the most serviceable specimens of the cart and dray-horse, of their size, and in the northern part of this State, in Vermont, and other sections on the Canada line, they are met with in great abundance.

DESCRIPTION OF A GOOD HORSE.

He should be about fifteen and a half hands high; the head light and clean made; wide between the nostrils, and the nostrils themselves large, transparent, and open; broad in the forehead; eyes, prominent, clear, and sparkling; ears, small, and neatly set on; neck, rather short, and well set up; large arm or shoulder, well thrown back and high; withers arched and high; legs, fine, flat, thin, and small boned; body round, and rather light, though sufficiently large to afford substance when it is needed; full chest, affording ample play for the lungs; back, short, with the hind quarters set on rather obliquely. Any one possessing a horse of this make and appearance, and weighing eleven or twelve hundred pounds, may rest assured that they have a horse of all work, and a bargain which is well worth getting hold of.

The tail of the horse is considered an emblem of dignity in Turkey, from the fact that a Turkish army once lost its standard in battle when the leader, to inspire the drooping courage of his men, cut off the tail of a horse, hoisted it on the head of a spear and rallied his force to victory. As a reward, he received military promotion, the emblem of which was a horse's tail. The rank of the owner is known by the number of tails he is allowed, the highest being three, and the officers are called "pachas of three tails."

Progress of Napoleon III.

Arrival at Dover.

The Emperor and Empress landed at Dover on Monday morning. The excitement and enthusiasm of the people were very great. Crowds thronged the pier all the morning, the people of the town mingled freely with the militia men, while the sea was alive with boats, each with flags of all colours decorating stem and stern. The Kent Mounted Rifles formed a line between the Lord Warden Hotel and the landing-place. Tremendous cheering took place as Prince Albert left the hotel, and, embarked on board the Vivid, steamed out to sea to meet the Imperial party. In half an hour afterwards the French vessel steamed in sight, the Pelican having the Imperial ensign flying at the main. There was almost deep silence among the crowd as the Imperial fleet, accompanied by the Vivid (on the deck of which Prince Albert might be seen,) came near the magnificent division of the Baltic fleet. Then, at a signal gun from the Neptune, the rigging of the British ships swarmed with men, and a peal of thunder from their ports welcomed the Emperor. The boats from the ship at once put off, and formed a double line, through which the Imperial steamers passed. The scene that now ensued defies description. The morning was very hot, the sun shone with intense brilliancy on the glittering sea and white cliffs; the water of the harbour were dashed into a thousand waves as the advancing squadron sent the spray before them; and then arose a tremendous shout from the sailors in the rigging of the British vessels. The cheers were redoubled three times with a strength and length peculiar to British seamen. Then, as the last cheer died away, it was taken up at once by the sailors in the boats, who stood up and cheered with an enthusiasm we have never seen excelled. The Emperor stood on the deck of the Pelican, and repeatedly uncovered. The Empress stood by his side. Prince Albert, having landed, received the Emperor at the landing-place. The guns thundered forth an Imperial salute, the bands struck up and the people cheered again and again. The first movement that could be discerned was the introduction of the Prince Consort to the Empress, and then the Emperor led the way towards the hotel. Almost immediately after he landed he turned towards the people, and bowed markedly and repeatedly. His Majesty looked uncommonly well; his whole face was animated, and in every gesture was expressed the cordial pleasure he felt at a reception that must have transcended all his expectations of a hearty ovation from the English people.

At nine o'clock His Royal Highness Prince Albert was pleased to receive the Mayor and Corporation of Dover, accompanied by the members for the borough, Lord Chelsea, and Mr. Rice, the Recorder, and the municipal magistrates, in the elegant saloon of the Lord Warden Hotel. The Recorder read a loyal address to His Royal Highness Prince Albert, to which His Royal Highness graciously replied.

The Mayor and Corporation of Dover next presented the following congratulatory address:—

"To their Imperial Majesties Napoleon III. and Eugenie, Emperor and Empress of France.

"May it please your Majesties,—We, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Dover, approach your Majesties with feelings of the most profound respect, deeply sensible of the honour conferred upon us in being graciously afforded the opportunity of expressing to your Majesties the hearty welcome with which we greet your arrival in this country to visit our beloved Queen. It is our earnest hope, that this auspicious event may tend to strengthen and perpetuate the cordial union which happily for the progress of freedom and civilization now exists between France and Great Britain, and that the just and necessary war, in the prosecution of which the combined fleets and armies of both nations are gallantly co-operating, may, through the blessing of Divine Providence, be speedily terminated by a secure and honourable peace.

"We rejoice that your Majesties have been pleased to select this ancient port for debarkation, and we shall cherish a lively remembrance of the honour that has thus been added to the many of a similar kind proudly recorded in our annals. We devoutly pray that you, Sire, may long guide the destinies of France, and reign in the hearts of a loyal, happy, and contented people; and that you, Madame, may long live to share the throne which your virtues so highly adorn, affording solace and relief to your august consort amid the cares inseparable from the government of a mighty nation.

"Given under our corporate seal at Dover, this 16th day of April, 1855."

The address was read with marked emphasis by the Recorder of the borough, Mr. Bodkin, and was listened to by the Imperial pair with great attention. At the end His Majesty, in a slightly foreign accent, but with the greatest facility of expression made the following gracious reply:—

"I am exceedingly grateful that your Queen has allowed me to find such an occasion to pay my respects to her and to show my sentiments of esteem and sympathy for the English people. I hope that the two nations always will be united in peace and in war, for I am convinced that it will be for the welfare of the whole world and for their own prosperity. I am exceedingly grateful to you for the sentiments you have expressed towards myself and the Empress, and I hope you will be the interpreter of my sentiments and hers to your countrymen."

The Empress was present while the address was delivered. She made a strong impression. People had prepared the English for her being beautiful; but that is not the word. With very regular features, the Empress Eugenie is placed among lovely women, by the engaging expression of her countenance, which is at once eminently intelligent, amiable, and simple, with an air of undesigned happiness and benevolence. A sly humour twinkled at the corner of the eyes as the powerful Prince rode among the cheering multitude, whom his smile seemed to recognize as the old friends known in other days. Prince Albert seemed to feel a just and heartfelt pride in the scene; it was universally remarked that he never looked more nobly.

The Mayor and Corporation having withdrawn, His Royal Highness Prince Albert at once conducted his guests to the railway station, which immediately adjoins the hotel. The interior of the station had been nicely decorated for the occasion with flags and evergreens, and the platform was kept clear by a guard of honour consisting of troops of the Line.

Along the line, on the way up to town, notwithstanding the high speed maintained, crowds of people assembled, who cheered lustily as the train swept on its course. Now it was a village school which had turned out to add shrill voices to the general chorus of welcome; now the labourers from the country side had collected on embankment, and in cutting, to raise a passing cheer. The stations were all filled with well-dressed people, and at Tunbridge, where the train stopped for a few minutes to water, the inhabitants were particularly fervent in their acclamations. Immediately after leaving Dover, the fog, which had hitherto so marred the enjoyableness of the occasion, disappeared as if by magic; the sun shone out brightly and the face of the country looked smiling and beautiful. At Croydon, among the spectators assembled, were a number of the Addiscombe cadets, who cheered heartily as the train passed. Then over the heights of Sydenham the Crystal Palace rose upon the view of the travellers, its fairy architecture displayed to extraordinary advantage through the reflection of the sunbeams, which made the glass roof and sides glow like a veritable mountain of light.

Charing-Cross.

At Charing-Cross, where vast numbers of people were collected, there was some display of flags, and the effect at this point was further heightened by the band of the Royal Marines, who played "Partant pour la Syrie" as the cortege passed the Admiralty. The scene presented by the clubs in Pall-Mall was particularly animated, and among those who gazed upon his progress from the well-known haunts of former days, His Majesty no doubt distinguished many old familiar faces. In front of St. James's Palace a guard of honour turned out and presented arms. St. James's-street had the windows and balconies of all its houses filled with a large assemblage of ladies, whose curiosity and interest were no doubt strongly excited by the Empress, and who waved their handkerchiefs as she passed. When they passed King-street, the Emperor was observed to draw her attention to the house which he had occupied in former days; and in him, at least, the sight of this, under such altered circumstances, must have raised some strange emotions. All along Piccadilly the same display of popular feeling greeted them, and so they passed through Hyde-Park to the Paddington station, receiving at every stage of their progress the warmest manifestations of respect and welcome. The Empress was evidently asking questions with great eagerness, the Prince replying, and the Emperor throwing in smiling remarks. The scene, in fact, was of the same character—the only change was in the streets and the individual faces. The aspect of the people, however, is an unimportant incident—it was one of cordial welcome; and the countenance of Prince Albert was full of a genial pride at the reception given to his guests. It was six o'clock, an hour behind time, before they started for Windsor, but they must have carried away with them a profound conviction of the cordial and gratified feelings with which their visit has inspired the inhabitants of this great Metropolis and of the country at large.

The Arrival at Windsor.

During the whole of Monday, Windsor was in a state of great excitement with the preparation for the reception of the illustrious visitors. The triumphal arch across Castle-street, copiously hung with lamps and adorned with flags of the four allied nations, was a conspicuous object; and scarcely less so was the smaller arch in Thames-street, at the entrance to the terminus of the Great Western Railway. All the seats within the precincts of the Railway Company's territory were awarded to the occupants gratis on special application, and were all taken on Saturday. However, in addition to the railway seats, a large platform was erected, commencing directly opposite to the smaller arch in Thames-street, and extending up Castle-street to the very foot of the principal arch. On this large platform places could be obtained for 5s. at any time during the afternoon, and the various shops which were used as agencies for the purpose were thronged with applicants.

There was a sort of notion at Windsor that the Emperor would arrive at a quarter after five o'clock, and hence expectations began at an unreasonably early hour. However, half-past five, and six, and half-past six passed away, and the multitude was forced to content itself with watching certain alterations made in the arrangement of the flags of the triumphal arch, which, we may observe, was in a state of perpetual improvement throughout the day. Expectation, however, was kindled afresh by the report, spread like wildfire, to the effect that the Emperor was at Paddington. Again the time seemed to grow long, the approaching evening began to sober that brilliancy of the sky which had so auspiciously distinguished the day, and the work of illuminating the lamps on the arch was deliberately commenced.

At this juncture there was something almost painful in the anxiety of the multitude, when, about seven o'clock, the report of a gun was heard, and everybody wakened into new life. That gun proclaimed that the Emperor was in sight on the railroad; the lamplighter of the arch speedily descended, and the thrilling sensation that the great event of the day would in a moment take place ran through the crowd like a galvanic shock.

The prophecy of the gun was soon fulfilled. The Emperor and Empress, with Prince Albert and their suite, arrived a few minutes afterwards, and it seemed but the work of a moment for them to alight, to leave the door of the waiting-room, so imposingly fronted by the "Welcome to Windsor" inscribed amid a thick mass of laurels on the opposite shed, to enter their carriages amid the shouts of the National School children, to receive the second inscribed "Welcome" from the smaller arch, and to proceed through the large arch in Castle-street, where their eyes were greeted by "Vive l'Empereur," "Vive l'Imperatrice," "Napoleon," "Eugenie," "Welcome." The thunder of applause that rolled through the multitude as the carriages passed was something marvellous, the intensity of the feeling receiving an additional stimulous from the momentary character of the "sight." The whole affair scarcely lasted a second, but then every body had a "good look" at the Empress, and a "good-look" at the Emperor, a thousand curiosities that had been raging for a week past were at once assuaged, and, of course, everybody was delighted. Indeed, so very enthusiastic was the delight that a fresh allowance of applause was lavished anew as each carriage of the cortege followed the Emperor up Castle-hill, and every one of the attendant visitors had reason to be satisfied with his share of the "reception."

In the evening the illuminations were a new source of attraction. The Town-hall, with lamps twined about the columns, and marking out the windows, and the two arches, which blazed with brilliancy, were dazzling objects, which could not easily be exceeded even in our own huge Metropolis.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

[BY SUBMARINE AND BRITISH TELEGRAPH.]

THE VIENNA CONFERENCES.

VIENNA, Tuesday.—The Russian instructions have arrived; they came yesterday. It is rumored that they oppose all limitation of the Russian naval force in the Black Sea. The Plenipotentiaries met this day at one o'clock for the 10th time. The sitting lasted one hour and a-half. The discussion on the third point was left open; there is, as yet, no decided solution. The next day's sitting is not fixed.

The probabilities of a peace have diminished, and the position taken up by Austria is less decided.

The latest letters, to the 14th, all concur in stating that the Eastern question is not progressing favourably. The representatives of England, France, and Austria confer daily, but they have not been able to come to an understanding, and are not very likely to do so. If there be little danger of a serious misunderstanding between Austria and the Western Powers, it does not admit of a doubt that a very great difference of opinion at present prevails on the Black Sea question. The Western Powers and Turkey agree in thinking that the only effectual way of putting an end to the preponderance of Russia in the Black Sea would be to declare it neutral, and to banish all vessels of war from its waters. Austria does not take the same view of things, and displays great anxiety to save the honor of Russia, or rather to prevent the Emperor Alexander being humiliated in the eyes of his subjects.

Lord John Russell has resolved to leave Vienna on Friday next, the 20th instant, for London.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys will probably leave on the same day.

Despatches from Berlin announce that Russia proposes a renewal of the Treaty of 1841, and a separate Treaty with Turkey, limiting the ships of war in the Black Sea, each nation to have an equal number, the European Powers guaranteeing this engagement.

Affairs in the East.

All hopes of Peace, we regret to say, are now at an end. The definite instructions of the Emperor Alexander have arrived, although their character has not yet transpired. No doubt, however, seems to be entertained, that they will be adverse to Peace; and that in consequence the Congress will break up. It seems Points One, Two, and Four, might possibly be got over, but the Third is intolerable to the pride of Empire; and concession, even to the very moderate extent of the demands of the Ambassadors of the Western Powers, would be deemed a humiliation which is not to be endured. Add to this the fact, that the die is cast in the Crimea. The reports of this morning are to the effect that Sir John Burgoyne, a few days ago, left for Vienna, with a view to confer with Lord John Russell; and, according to the Correspondent of the Times, it was believed his opinions would be of a disheartening character. It was then stated, on the 2nd instant, that a wish extensively prevailed among the soldiers for Peace; and such a wish is, of course, but a sorry preparation for the renewal of the campaign, and especially for the desperate enterprise of bombarding and assaulting Sebastopol. Seven days after, however, the bombardment actually commenced; and there is no doubt that this circumstance will minister excitement sufficient to revive drooping spirits and to prepare the troops for the fearful events which are now impending. The result of the bombardment none can foresee; but there will be something decisive, either prosperous or adverse, and an end will be put to the long and wasteful sitting before the walls of that great citadel. There is no probability of any decisive operations in the country where the various Russian armies are now placed until the result of the bombardment shall have been ascertained.

The intelligence from Paris this morning is to the effect, that the Emperor will forthwith proceed to the Crimea. It appears everything in Marseilles is in readiness, and that three hours' notice will be sufficient. There seems a probability of this event; in Paris, indeed, it is generally believed, and it begins to be extensively desired, as a step by which new life will be imparted to the French Army in the East. If such shall be the fact, his previous advent to England, and the extraordinary demonstrations there made in his favor, will be a circumstance of great importance, and constitute the best possible preparation for the Imperial visit. What is now transpiring in our midst will not be without its effect in Vienna, and also in Berlin. It seems, nevertheless, now certain that, after all, Austria will prove but a broken reed. Hopes were entertained concerning her for some time past; but the cautions of Kossuth, and the warning of many others, appear to have been but too well founded. Her heart was not in the work: and now she breaks off on the Third Point, considering that the Western Powers, on the part of Turkey, demand too much. This is a serious circumstance, and materially alters the aspect of affairs. We are just about where we were six months ago, and the cheering hopes lately entertained have passed away. It was considered, that the stand taken by Austria would operate favourably in the matter of Peace; it has not done so. We are once more thrown upon our own resources, and have only to look to Providence, who alone can bring deliverance.—British Banner.

The Sultan's Firman against Slavery.

The following is the firman lately addressed by the Sultan to Mustapha Pacha, General-in-Chief of the Imperial army of Batoum, interdicting the commerce of slaves in the Black Sea:—

"Man is the most noble of all the creatures formed by the hand of God, who destined him to be happy in making him free-born; but, contrary to that decision, the Circassians indulge in the strange habit of selling their children from each other, in order to sell them like animals or articles of furniture. These proceedings, incompatible with the dignity of man, and contrary to the will of the sovereign Creator, are altogether reprehensible, and I condemn them absolutely. Wherefore I have just given orders that, to prevent that state of things from being continued, counsels and directions should be given to the Circassians, and at the same time proper measures be adopted to prevent the embarkation of slaves on the coast; and in order that this decision be known to all the civil and military authorities in these districts, the pre-present firman has been rendered expressly by my imperial divan. Wherefore, a vizir being thus informed of what I desire, you will proceed with that zeal and high intelligence which distinguish you, to make known my sovereign will to the Circassians and all others concerned, by publishing it in the most detailed manner. You will do all that your sagacity and experience will suggest to you to put an end to that traffic, and to prevent the passage and embarkation of slaves in the waters under your command; and besides, as it is urgent to punish all who contravene these orders, and are guilty of selling their children or relatives, or the children or relatives of others, you will not lose sight of that point; in fine, you will pay every attention to do every thing indicated above, and you will show full respect to the noble cipher with which the present document is adorned. Given in the second decade of the month of Mouharrem, 1271 (beginning of October, 1854.")

Fighting with the Austrians in the Principalities.

A private latter gives an account of the trouble in Krajood, already announced by telegraph.

An Austrian officer, on the 11th March, saw at a window a lady, whose beauty attracted him, and he forthwith entered the house and demanded admittance to her apartment. The lady called for assistance to expel the intruder. Her husband came and addressed the Austrian, but too civilly: "What do you want here? I do not know "you. You are not billited in my house, "and the lady you are insulting is my wife." Without a word, the Austrian drew his sword, and stabbed the husband to the heart. Much excitement ensued. Some of the bystanders went to lodge a formal complaint with the Police,—others sent intelligence to the Turkish Commandant at Kalafat, who lost no time in sending to Krajova a battalion of infantry, and a squadron of cavalry and artillery. A crowd proceeded to the Austrian General to demand the arrest of the offender. The General's reply was brief, but to the point:—"Go to the devil! "I won't punish my soldiers, for such a fel-"low as you!" This brutal reply roused the indignation of the people. All the stores were closed, and the citizens assembled in the streets, crying "death to the Austrians! "they are but one against four! We won't "submit to be slaughtered like the people "of Bucharest!"

A general riot ensued, and the citizens, armed with sticks, iron bars and axes, attacked and put to death every Austrian they met. The Austrians, on their side, turned out and attacked the people, killing forty persons in the first charge. At this juncture the national gens d'armes, and the Roman soldiers attacked the Austrians, and, after a fierce fight, drove them at the point of the bayonet out of the city, where they yet remain encamped in the fields. Official statements return 247 killed, on both sides. The excitement continues, and the citizens have not reopened their stores. They demand justice, and are about to send a deputation to Constantinople to seek it from the Sultan.

TURKEY THE WISEST OF THEM ALL.—Speaking of the instructions of the Vienna Conference, the Liverpool Journal says:—"Turkey, that power we are defending, is turning up the only sensible party in all the diplomacy. The Turkish note to the Turkish envoy at Vienna [obtained surreptitiously, of course, and very inconveniently published] is a master-piece of common sense and discretion; and were there no other evidence at hand, would sufficiently indicate the hopelessness of the sham at Vienna. The Turks decline having their interests chattered away at Vienna by the old gentlemen, severally applied by the so-called protecting states; and, knowing their rights and their chances, are resolved to fight it out with Russia. In this way the only glory won has been by the Turks—and in diplomacy, they are evidencing a capacity utterly bewildering to our servile Palmerston and Russell. The fact is, that the Crimea has quite exploded the Franks' pretention to superiority; and the notion the Turkish gentleman now has of the Englishman is, that he is a wealthy fool. What may support the idea is the suspicion among Englishmen that, on the whole, perhaps the Mahomedan is not altogether wrong.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT.—During the ceremony of crowning Alexander II. of Russia, and while the oaths of fidelity were being taken, the Great Bell of the Kremlin, which was being tolled on the occasion, fell, and crushed nearly 100 persons to death. The circumstance was regarded as fearfully ominous.

STRIKE OF THE COLLIERS AT WIGAN.—Two or three weeks ago, the members of the Wigan Coal Proprietors' Association met together, and resolved to reduce the wages of the colliers in their employment to the extent of 10 per cent., and also to work their mines eight days a fortnight instead of twelve days. As the men are paid once in two weeks, a fortnight's notice was given them of the contemplated reduction of wages and the lessening of the hours of labor; and that notice has now expired at nearly all the pits in the district. The whole body of the coal miners are in an unsettled state, and the men in the employment of the Ince Hall Coal and Cannel Company, most of those employed by the Moss Hall Coal Company, and all who worked in the Pigeon Pit, belonging to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, and the Hosier House Pit, belonging to Mr. Thomas Gidlow, have struck work. The total number of persons, colliers and drawers, who are thus thrown into a state of idleness, will probably be nearly 1,500.—Manchester Examiner.

"The Black Siddons."

Mrs. Webb, the lady we have before spoken of as making her debut in dramatic readings, read to a large and highly intelligent audience, on Thursday evening of last week, under the above nom de plume. Among those present we noticed many of the histrionic profession, and some of the best teachers and critics of elocution in America. If she is not thoroughly criticised, it will not be for the want of the presence of those who are abundantly able to preform that task.

Her appearance is extremely graceful and prepossessing, and being of a color that will vary but little from that of a native Mexican girl, the disagreeable prejudice of mere complexion can, of course, proceed but a very little way before being checked by the fact that the Anglo-Saxon predominates and has, true to its aggressive character, obliterated the African feature and hue to such a degree that we see before us little more than a deep brunette, so that the name black Siddons is a misnomer in the case except, for those whose moral vision is so oblique as to see no shades in the race against which the northern portion of this country seems to have an unconquerable prejudice. But the evident talent of Mrs. Webb will compel her auditors to forget the tinge of prescribed blood. Her first performance was that of reading the well-known and soul stirring piece, "The Maniac." We consider the sitting position which she retained during this piece, as well as the commencement of the exercises with it, as unfortunate. It seems to require more than anything read during the evening, a standing position, and much more passion than was shown in its reading. It is a piece which requires action to a degree that would exhaust a delicate woman like Mrs. Webb, beyond the power of following it by half a dozen other pieces requiring energy and action. It would have been a very fine reading for a drawing room, but was too tame for a public audience. We do not mean by this that it was far beyond the reading of most performers, even on the stage, for it excels the majority.

The next piece was Act 3rd, Scene 1st, of the School for Scandal. It is in the real dramatic reading that Mrs. Webb excels. While we have never heard the scene between Sir Peter and Lady Teazle, better read on the stage or off, we have often heard it rendered much worse. We have a disinct recollection of hearing Miss Kimberly read it in an eastern city; and must, so far as we are capable of judging, give the preference to Mrs. Webb. We much mistake if a Boston audience will not generally do the same.

Her Romeo and Juliet was well read, but did not equal the scenes from School for Scandal. It might, however, be set down as a creditable performance, even for the best trained and best educated reader of our times.

The scene from Fazio was most admirably read, and elicited much applause. The last piece of part first, was, "Irish Eccentricities." This was no more than fairly done: she did not seem to appreciate the true Irish character or brogue sufficiently to give it the comical effect of which it was susceptible.

Her second part was read standing, and commenced with another scene from "School for Scandal," which was admirably done, not often excelled by actors or readers. The same remark will apply to the scene from "Twelfth Night." In fact, she excelled in all the dramatic pieces proper. The scene from the "Fire Worshippers," of Lalla Rookh did not strike as so well done as most of the others, although it would be but justice to say that some of our best critics pronounce it most excellently rendered. It seemed to us to lack passion and action. The general correctness of emphasis, could not be questioned. Her French piece was admirably done, and, her "Negro Eccentricities" were so near perfection that our mind was carried back to our native State, where we had heard and seen the genuine "darkies" of the South act naturally, that which Mrs. Webb had acquired by practice and study. We could fairly see the characters represented by her.

As a whole, taking into account the opportunities she must have had, the obstacles she has encountered, we must pronounce this one of the most remarkably debuts of the Quaker City. We venture to say that none of the best readers that have been known to the American public, made a better impression than Mrs. Webb, and won more honor at the ouset; had more reason to hope for a name that shall stand high among this class of Artists, notwithstanding the prejudice, opposition, envy and jealousy she will have to encounter. We understand she will read in some of the principle cities of New England. We bespeak for her that hearing which her talents deserve, and that will be the largest success.—Woman's Advocate.

Marriage of Lucy Stone under Protest.

T. W. Higginson sends to the Worcester Spy the following:

It was my privilege to celebrate May-Day by officiating at a wedding, in a farm-house among the hills of West Brookfield. The bridegroom was a man of tried worth, a leader in the Western Anti-Slavery movement; and the bride was one whose fair fame is known throughout the nation—one whose rare intellectual qualities are excelled by the private beauty of her heart and life.

I never perform the marriage ceremony without a renewed sense of the iniquity of our present system of laws, in respect to marriage;—a system by which 'man and wife are one, and that one is the husband.' It was with my hearty concurrence, therefore, that the following protest was read and signed, as a part of the nuptial ceremony, and I send it to you, that others may be induced to do likewise.

PROTEST.

While we acknowledge our mutual affection, by publicly assuming the sacred relationship of husband and wife, yet in justice to ourselves and a great principle, we deem it a duty to declare that this act on our part implies no sanction of, nor promise of voluntary obedience to, such of the present laws of marriage, as refuse to recognise the wife as an independent rational being, while they confer upon the husband an injurious and unnatural superiority, investing him with legal powers which no honorable man would exercise, and which no man should possess.

We protest especially against the laws which give to the husband—

1. The custody of his wife's person.
2. The exclusive control and guardianship of their children.
3. The sole ownership of her personal, and use of her real estate, unless previously settled upon her, or placed in the hands of trustees, as in the case of minors, lunatics and idiots.
4. The absolute right to the product of her industry.
5. Also against laws which give to the widower so much larger and more permanent an interest in the property of his deceased wife, than they give to the widow in that of her deceased husband.
6. Finally, against the whole system by which 'the legal existence of the wife is suspended during marriage,' so that in most States she neither has a legal part in the choice of her residence, nor can she make a will, nor sue or be sued in her own name, nor inherit property.

We believe that personal independence and equal human rights can never be forfeited, except for crime; that marriage should be an equal and permanent partnership, and so recognized by law; that until it is so recognized, married partners should provide against the radical injustice of present laws, by every means in their power.

We believe that where domestic difficulties arise, no appeal should be made to legal tribunals under existing laws, but that all difficulties should be submitted to the equitable adjustment of arbitrators mutually chosen.

Thus reverencing law, we enter our protest against rules and customs which are unworthy of the name, since they violate justice, the essence of Law.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.—The Herald publishes a statement respecting the political complexion of the next Congress, of which the following are the material points:—Twenty-one States have held their congressional elections. In the last House the administration had a majority of fifty-one among the members from those States. By the late elections this majority has vanished, and in its stead appears an opposition majority of ninety-eight, showing a loss to the administration of one hundred and forty-nine. Seventy-four members are still to be elected, all from the South, except one or two to fill vacancies. All of these will go with the administration on the Nebraska question, but the opposition will still be in the majority. It follows that Northern men can have things their own way in the next House—if they will. But probably they won't.—Ibid.

SHOCKING AFFAIR.—We learn from the Dixon Telegraph that on Sunday last, six Irishmen came to this place from Paolo station, on a hand car, purchased a keg of whiskey, and soon became very drunk. Nearly all day they were running the car back and forth over the road, and finally left for Paolo a few minutes before the down train at Freeport was due. About three miles from Dixon they met the train in a curve in the road—the locomotive being nearly upon them before it was discovered. Three of the men were sober enough to spring from the car and save themselves, the others were not. The car was shivered to splinters, one of the men killed instantly, another surviving but a short time, and the third was very seriously injured.—Chicago Democratic Press

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—The church at Farmington, Ct., (Rev Dr. Porter, pastor,) has adopted the following resolution among others, viz:—

"That the refusal of the American Tract Society to treat slavery as it does intemperance, gambling, and other gross immorralities, or even as it does dancing, sleeping in church, and similar faults, it is grossly inconsistent, and if persisted in, will justly forfeit the confidence and support of the Christian community.—Exchange.

The letter of Mr. J. C. Brown, as will be seen, counsels the Committee to ask very many questions, though not any that are not pertinent and necessary, when proposed, as in this case, only that the much needed light may be given, upon an Institution very evidently the fugitives' property of right, (as the vote of Mr. Henson, given at the Drummondsville Convention clearly shows, and which we here insert).

Resolved.—That the Dawn Institution belongs to the People of Colour in Canada generally.

Vote taken, and stood as follows:—Yeas, Messrs. Cannon, Smallwood, Ramsay, Freeman, Dunlop, Warren, J. Henson, J. S. Henson, Elmsley, Farris, Watson, Liles, Stringer, Counter, Taylor, Russell—16. Nay—none.

Although objection may be made to the desultory and somewhat disconnected manner of the letter, still it is invaluable, as laying bare the ugliness of a system that does more to retard the fugitives of Canada in their growth, than any other evil besetting them. The begging for fugitives abroad or at home, further than to meet the ordinary necessities of their share of the poor, in common with other poor emigrants, &c., is humbug, by whomsoever encouraged!! Not only are we led to this irresistible conclusion, while considering the suggestions made by Mr. Brown, but, the great desire expressed by the parties to be benefitted, to have the begging stopped, and to understand how their property and other means begged for them have been or are being appropriated, serves to strengthen the conclusion, that were the people benefitted by other than their own exertions, they would know it; they would not have to ascertain what this or the other one who knows so much more, has been doing. The works of their "benefactors" would be as plain as day, and not as they now are, so complex that a lawyer could not unravel them. The fact is, Fugitives will have to agree to let all parties, whether self-appointed or other almoners, of funds and possessions of theirs, take the lion's share of the funds as well as to have not only the guardianship of but the entire possession and profits of the lands, and content themselves with inquiry, and protest. We wish to be understood as not including Buxton or the Elgin Settlement, where the people occupy their own land, and earn their funds, and where their worthy adviser, Mr. King, begs no man for clothes, aid or money to buy lands.

The following reply of the Hon. Sir Allan Macnab to the inquiry of Mr. Larwill, as to the intention of Government respecting Colored Militia, will be read with satisfaction; showing, as it does, that the highest authority in the country is not actuated by any narrow policy towards colored subjects. Sir Allan's reply to the "tinker," vindicates British Statesmen from the imputation of disregard of the rights of colored men.

With regard to whether at present colored persons held Her Majesty's Commissions in this Province, there were none; but there were, doubtless, among such persons men who would discharge their duties willingly and creditably to themselves and the country. And with regard to the last question, whether it was the intention of the government to make any distinction of color or race, be would say most pointedly, that it was not the intention of the Government to do so.

A HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS,

FROM THE EARLIEST PERIODS TO THE PRESENT TIME;

UNIVERSAL HISTORY:

IN WHICH THE HISTORY OF EVERY NATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN, IS SEPARATELY GIVEN.

Illustrated by 70 Stylographic Maps and 700 Engravings.

By S. G. GOODRICH,

AUTHOR OF 'PICTORIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD,' 'PARLEY'S CABINET LIBRARY,' 'PARLEY'S TALES,' &c.

Complete in one imperial octavo volume, of more than twelve hundred pages of double column letter-press; and upwards of seven hundred elegant illustrations.

This work, so far as we can gather from a hurried glance at its contents, is in every sense what its title claims, a general history, containing, with a minuteness of detail unequalled, a vast amount of information on every conceivable subject, incidentally or directly bearing upon that department of literature. But independently of any thing that might be said of it, on a hasty examination of its pages, the many capital critiques of it by competent judges, some of which are added, and the great reputation of its author, should ensure it a general reading. To our people, the book recommends itself as obviating much of the outlay which would be incurred were many of them who would have information of the kind it contains to purchase in separate works on the different subjects treated of in it.

The following is a notice of it from the Boston Post:

"Of the excellence and character of the compilation we have heretofore spoken, and can, therefore, do little more at present than to repeat ourselves. Not only the philosophy of history, but geology, geography, and astronomy, are discussed, at reasonable length, in the introductory chapters. Then comes a very interesting essay on physical and political geography, followed by a paper on the antediluvian and patriarchal ages. To this succeeds the history of Asia and Africa, from the earliest period to the present time. Then succeeds, in order, the history of Europe and America. In every respect this "Universal History" is to be commended as a useful compilation. For students, as well as for the general reader, it must prove highly attractive. The illustrations answer every purpose, and really illustrate the text. Although called a "history," and thereby ranked by some people with many a drowsy volume, we can assure our readers that they will scarcely find a more readable book, than this under notice. The compiler is neither dull nor tedious. He does his work briefly and clearly, and, in addition to the historical facts, gives many curious anecdotes and statements regarding the manners, customs, social life, religion, government, costume, sports, amusements and employments, of the different nations of the earth. We advise people to look at the publication. It is just the thing for the general reader, being neither deep, nor verbose, nor stupid. It it a compilation made with taste and skill, as well as with patience and labor."

DAWN INSTITUTE.

To the Members of the Investigating Committee.

GENTLEMEN,—As you have been appointed to get at the true state of the Dawn Institute, allow me to make some remarks and to propose some questions to you, which if asked by you and answered, will serve you as a key to the information you want. How long shall they ask and not get an answer, or are the Trustees of the Dawn Institution dumb or deaf? The Press has asked in vain what has become of the money that was laid out for the Fugitives in Canada? Secondly, whose hands is that property got into now? if they are carrying out the Manual Labor School or not, or if a few individuals have converted it to their own uses? Ask the Rev. John Roaf, of Toronto, if he and George Johnson did not pay the debts to Josiah Henson and Peter B. Smith, which they said they owed some six years ago? I refused to pay the said debts, because the Committee did not audit up their book accounts, as Mr. Roaf stated, to that Committee, that he would pay no debts contracted by them, not one dollar; for they should be responsible for their own debts. Ask Josiah Henson if the debts were not paid to him and Peter B. Smith by the Trustees? or who sent him to England, there to represent himself to the good people on that Island, and that the Trustees at Dawn had sent him out as their good, faithful, and tried servant, (Josiah Henson,) to beg money to pay a debt when he well knew that it was already paid off? Ask him if he will deny this. Ask Mr. Roaf for what reason he turned off the Free Mission Baptist, when, at the same time himself and the Trustees acknowledged that they had faithfully done their duty to the pupils, as Teachers and Ministers, and told them to go on, good and faithful servants, "I bid you God speed in your work of charity?" The scenes have all changed. One Mr. John Scoble came over from England that evening; truthful were the words that Dr. Burns wrote, that these were the sunny days of Dawn, under the care of the Mission. Please to ask Mr. Roaf if he did not hold informal meetings, one at his house in the country, and the other next morning in the basement story of his church? I was one of the Trustees, and happened to be sent from Chatham to the North American Convention held in Toronto, or I would have known nothing about the plans that were concocted. Please to know of Peter B. Smith, did he sign over his trust to Mr. Scoble in the Dawn Institution, and whether the said Scoble was to carry out the spirit and letter of the Declaration of Trust, which he jointly agreed with other Trustees to carry out?

It would be well for you to know of Mr. George Johnson, whether he signed his trust to Mr. Scoble in the basement story of Mr. Roaf's church, or was he induced to sign away on the highway?

Mr. Frederick Stover, one of the Trustees, had signed away his trust in the said Institution, by a written document, given to the remaining Trustees some eight years ago. Ask Mr. Henson if he was not sent by some one to induce Mr. Stover to sign away a right he had no control over, to Mr. John Scoble? and ask Mr. Henson, why he should make himself so interested, as he never was a Trustee? All the figure he acted upon the stage of Dawn was that of a beggar for it. Ask him if he knows who took forcible possession of the Dawn, and if so whether, when doing so, any locks were forcibly broken, and if so, who by? Ask him if Mr. John Scoble is not walking in there and enjoying the property given to the Fugitives? You will do well to ask the Rev. Hiram Wilson, who was first resident of Dawn, if he signed over to Mr. John Scoble a deed of one hundred acres of land, belonging to the Fugitives, for which he and his wife had signed one jointly before, to all of the Trustees? if so, who of the Trustees authorised him to do so? The Rev. Mr. Roaf promised George Johnson and myself, if we would sign over to John Scoble our trust in the Institution, he would see the Free Mission Baptists satisfied for all the expenses during their removal there; "if so, good; if not, they will prove a great obstacle in our way in trying to raise up Dawn!" as they are our true friends through America, in particular would they be when sending out agents, for we might find them as Noah did the raven.

A word, Gentlemen, as to Dawn at present. Instead of carrying out the Manual Labor School, agreeable to promise, Mr Scoble has got the Institution, with hired men cutting a grove, which the Trustees had reserved for a Methodist Camp Ground and Students Pleasure Grounds. He is having some hundred cords of wood cut; I am in hopes he will not turn out as Henson did, get all the Fugitives fine walnut logs. Where are the Trustees that ever knew of the income of one dollar? Call upon the colored people of the Province to rally, as one man, to select two or three of your most intelligent men in the different districts to meet at the School house at Dawn, the day before the last Wednesday in August, 1855, to appoint six Trustees, and augment their number up to twelve; this is in accordance with the Declaration of Trust. We read that many who are not thought of come to wear crowns. Education is the greatest blessing to man, strive to encourage it then by promoting its Institutions; if you raise up your children without education, at least one-half will go down to the tomb of oblivion, or bring shame and disgrace upon you. Educate your children, and they will prove a blessing to their country, an honor to themselves, and to you, and it will be a consolation in death.

No. IV.

TORONTO, May 4, 1855.

DEAR MADAM,—No. III was a continuation of my examination of the Tory and Conservative party. I now propose to examine the Reform party, in the same way, and so conclude with a general comparison of the two; and the one which is found the firmest encourager and supporter of British Institutions should receive the undivided support of the colored people; on the other hand, that party which is found giving its support to Republican Institutions, to the exclusion of Monarchical or British, should receive their undivided opposition. Can any one who has even a superficial knowledge of the action of American Republicanism upon the colored people in the United States, be surprised at the abhorrence in which it is held by those who have made their escape from its dark abode, and who have been compelled to swallow the dregs of its oppression, as it were, under their peculiar Institution, peculiar indeed to Republicanism, as the evidence of history well establishes; breeding, enslaving, buying, selling and whipping colored men, women and children, and excluding them as much as possible from all social happiness, is one of its characteristics. Does any one imagine that those who have escaped from that infernal system will submit to be brought again under its baneful influences for the gratification of a discontented faction; nay, I answer, not until every drop of blood shall have run out of their veins in defence of British principles. But to the Reform party, which I have proposed to examine next. The word Reform, when applied to modern political Reform, is susceptible of a good deal of demagoguism and subtilty; by it, the subversion of British, and the substitution of American Republican Institutions are sought in this Province, by those who call themselves Reformers; they generally unite with the old Reform party, (which is composed of many sincere constitutional Reformers, who, I doubt not, are as loyal as any of Her Majesty's loving subjects,)—a union by which they hope to accomplish their nefarious designs of annexation. Hence, they are always found favoring any and every scheme which has the remotest chance of leading to its accomplishment, and on the other hand, opposing every thing that tends to strengthen British Institutions; they are great admirers of American Republican Institutions, African Slavery not excepted; for it is a remarkable fact that in scarcely any, if any at all, of their declamations against tyranny and despotism, anything is said against the oppression of the African race in the United States or elsewhere; though, indeed, in this matter, they are no more one-sided than others, for the African race in America seem to have been given over to oppression by the common consent of Statesmen in both hemispheres. American Statesmen make laws to oppress colored people, and British Statesmen wink at them, when being executed on colored British subjects, simply because they are colored; even his Lordship, Viscount Palmerston, when a question of the rights of Her Majesty's colored subjects (which was based on treaties made for the protection of British subjects) came before him, relinquished his usual valor, and hesitated, equivocated, and left the poor fellows, with one or two exceptions perhaps, to their fate. What a contrast; in France where they don't make so great pretentions to free and liberal principles as in Britain, the Minister stood up in the Assembly and declared to the world that the French Government would protect colored French subjects anywhere and everywhere. There is safety in being a subject where Statesmen like them rule; but the meanness of some British Statesmen may defeat the ends of justice, but they cannot effect the soundness of the British constitution and laws. Therefore it behoves the colored people to place themselves in a position to maintain them, which can only be done by an alliance with the party that is most sound in British principles. Even in that party, though the alliance should be strictly adhered to, yet the prune and sieve should be used by the colored people, by casting their united vote against any in it who might come forward for their suffrage the least tainted with American Republicanism, so as to keep it as truly British as possible. Now then, after having for some time digressed, I proceed to examine the Reform party more minutely, one faction of that party having tried the virtue of physical force, but being defeated, has resolved to try milder, but more insidious means, it operates like an under current; it loses no opportunity to bring British Institutions into disrepute and disuse, by an unfavorable comparison with the Yankees. On the other hand, it encourages Republicanism by the introduction of Yankee notions in various ways, for instance, books containing reading matter and portraits representing Monarchical and British Institutions in an unfavorable light, so as to poison and prejudice the minds of the credulous and young, who are coming on the political stage against England, and so effect an easy transition from Monarchy to Republicanism; that faction is also a great supporter of Free Trade, because it looks upon that as one of the great helps to carry out its design; its hope has been strengthened by the opinion of one of the ablest Statesmen in England (the one who, I believe, loves political power more than he loves honor, and who would say anything that would tend to the advancement of his political aggrandizement,) who gave it to the effect that if a majority of the people of this Province wished a separation from the Mother Country, she would have no objection; hence, it behoves the colored people to not help to make that majority, to enable it to declare itself a Republic, or to hitch itself to the neighboring Republic.

A Family of Ten Slaves Ransomed.

PHILADELPHIA, April 27th, 1855.

The freedom of the "ten North Carolina Slaves," have at last been secured!

Though direct and incidental reference has, on several occasions, been made concerning this interesting family, through the Anti-Slavery papers, now they are free, it may be interesting to the readers of the Freeman, to know something of the manner by which their liberties were obtained. In order thus to give a brief account of them, I must go back for at least three years, when their owner, Joshua Scott, of Newburn, N. C., first offered them to Boston Fenderson, (brother to an aged female member of the family) of this city, for $1000. The owner being a humane slave-holder, advanced in years, and in poor health, and feeling desirous that his slaves should enjoy their liberty ere he departed, was induced as he thought, to make the obtainment of their freedom as favourable as his circumstances would allow. Hence his low offer, as above. Besides the family of ten, there were others, (males,) to whom he promised their freedom, on their paying him $100 each.

The offer, of course, was readily accepted by all concerned. The male slaves commenced working out their redemption; at the same time, Boston Fenderson began operations in behalf of the others in this city. He made earnest, though gentle appeals, in every direction. Though the price was so uncommonly low, and the freedom of the slaves so invaluable, for a considerable length of time his efforts met with but very meagre encouragement, attributed perhaps to his not having pressed his suit as unyieldingly as some others would have done. At length, as it will be remembered by some, the late Esther Moore, though, at the time quite engrossed in labours of a beneficial character, as her life always had been, became deeply interested in behalf of this family, and commenced labouring, anxiously and actively, in soliciting aid for their purchase. In her noble mission, visits from door to door, being filled with sympathy for the oppressed, she spent many half hours, warmly advocating the rights of man, using more vigour than her age and health could endure. She was, however, signally successful, though melancholy to think, her valuable life was shortened thereby. In a short time she raised $300, which she had scarcely deposited in the hands of the trustees, when her strength failed!—prostration and death soon following. Thus ended the labours of this philanthropist with these slaves, as well as other earthly interests.

Now, Mr. Fenderson is again the only agent to resume the responsibilities of raising the deficiencies, which were not quite $200. Having pretty thoroughly, within the past two years, travelled over the collecting ground—he could not but feel somewhat discouraged—the thought could scarcely be resisted, that after all, his relatives might have to remain all their days in bondage! From some, his appeals had met with a cold reception; from others, contempt and insult. It was very natural, therefore, that he should feel as he did. A few sympathizing friends, however, feeling that it would be too hard to allow them to remain in bondage, after so much had been done, and so little remained to be accomplished, resolved that the balance should be forthcoming. Hence, individuals collected a part of it, and the Black Swan, (Miss E. T. Greenfield,) kindly gave the benefit of one of her concerts, all of which made up the desired amount, which was forwarded to the owner. With what joy the glad tidings were hailed by the family may be better imagined from what shall presently follow.

Nearly three years they had been anxiously waiting for the day of release! Their friend not having succeeded as rapidly as they had cause to hope, time after time, when they expected to be discharged, passed by! Truly they were sadly tried, and sometimes compelled to doubt. Their slave friends, free acquaintances, and also slaveholders took great freedom in expressing their opinions, and in offering advice, &c., which in some instances was not of a very agreeable character.

Some of their slave friends would tell them: "I knew Scott was not going to let you off." "I wish my head may never ache till you get in the North." Others would say that they would be more "likely" to be sent South than North. The slaveholders very kindly suggested that they would find it much more pleasant in the South, with masters to provide for all their wants; with a pleasant warm climate, than they would in the cold North with wholesale starvation and misery perpetually gnashing upon them?

Occasionally high prices were offered for choice ones in the lot, $500 was offered for a small girl (by the way she has since died, leaving but nine instead of ten.) But to be brief, after it was fully noised about that their freedom had been secured, and that they were actually making preparations to come to a free State, the tune of their slave friends was very remarkably changed. Their own horrid fate perhaps appeared more vividly oppressive than it had ever done before. "If I could only have your chance, I would not wait for clothes—would go half naked," some would say. Others would say they would not wait for a vessel—would go in a yawl." Some said they would rather "live on gruel free, than to continue slaves." These, and many other similar remarks, were related to me by the emancipated family, while spending an evening with them.

They arrived here about ten days ago, and thus far seem highly delighted with the idea that for the future they will have the pleasure of taking care of themselves. With regard to their owner, they all agreed that he was kind to them, fed them well, &c., [illegible] appreciated their freedom more [illegible]d I to the old "grandmother," [illegible]"Why did you wish to leave?" "I wanted my freedom!" she replied, and laughed heartily. I tried to bring before their minds as many endearing associations connected with their nativity and life as I could, wishing to learn, if possible, if they had one lingering desire for the "flesh pots of Egypt;" but not one was to be found from the least to the oldest!

In appearance they are above ordinary, seem intelligent and genteel. The family consists of the old lady referred to, a neice of hers, three young women, one young man, and three children, complexion dark.

P.S. Just had, this evening, a fine arrival, per underground.

Arrival of the "Asia."

HALIFAX, May 8th.

The Steamship Asia arrived about ten o'clock last night.

The Hermann sailed from Southampton for New York.

The latest intelligence from the Crimea is to the 19th from Lord Raglan, and 22nd from the Russian commander.

The bombardment still continues, though without important result.

The French Exhibition had been postponed to the 15th May.

Since the breaking up of the Vienna Conference there has been several supplementary meetings of the four Powers without result. The plenipotentiaries re-assembled on the 23rd, and signed the protocol of last Conference; subsequently there was another meeting by the request of Prince Gortschakoff, when further inadmissable propositions were made by the Russian Minister Plenipotentiary, which were rejected by France, England and Turkey.

Lord John Russell had left Vienna, previous to which he had a private interview with Count Buol for two hours.

Baron De L'Huys' departure is postponed for a few days to discuss matters with the Austrian Government. The general tone of opinion in England is that war must continue for a lengthened period. The London Times speaks of the policy of the new Czar as more audacious, and is so regarded throughout Europe.

Nothing definite is known about the siege. The general impression is favourable to the Allies, but the Russians returned their fire in a spirited manner.

Details of the news from the Crimea state, that April 14th bombardment continues night and day from 500 guns.

It is difficult to form an estimate of the real progress of the siege from the comparison of the various accounts, but an impression is produced that the fire of the Allies is superior to that of the enemy.

Brown, Shipley & Co. report breadstuffs as having considerably advanced and market buoyant. Wheat has advanced 6d a 8d. Flour 1s 6d a 2s. Corn 3d. Western canal 38s a 42s 6d. Ohio 43s a 45s. Market closed very steady.

Richardson & Co. report provisions unchanged, except bacon, which had advanced 1s.

The weather has been unfavourable, and corn has considerably advanced. Quotations are 3s per quarter higher. Market buoyant.

The Seat of Government Question.

As we anticipated in yesterday's issue, the Legislative Council has determined to disturb the arrangement deliberately sanctioned by the popular branch of the Legislature. A question which has almost broken up existing party affinities during the present Session of Parliament is thus attempted to be re-opened; and a body which has been declared unfit for legislative purposes assumes the responsibility of undoing that which has been done by the representatives of the people. The telegraphic despatch, which we published in last evening's edition, announces that the Council passed resolutions and adopted an address on the Seat of Government question—affirming the principle of a permanent location. The resolutions, which were sent down to the Lower House, were passed by a vote of 14 to 8.

It may be premature to speculate as to the course which the Lower House will pursue with regard to these resolutions. We cannot, however, for a moment suppose that even a respectable minority of the Lower House will consent, at this late period of the Session, to take up again a question which has been so thoroughly discussed. The Session has already extended over more than five months, exclusive of the adjournment. Much important business still remains unfinished. The season has come when many members can ill afford to be absent from home. And it is not improbable that many of those who may favor the selection of Montreal as the Seat of Government will oppose the reintroduction of a discussion which has already extended over three days of the Session.

If a precedent is required for ignoring this solemn decision of the Council, it will be found in the proceedings of the Legislature on the same question, in 1849. The same antagonism between the two branches of the Legislature existed then as exists now. And the reasons which justified the government in conforming to the decision of the popular branch in 1849, certainly exists in equal force in 1855.—Leader, 27th.

Liquor Law Defeated.

It seems by reports from Quebec that the Liquor Law has received its quietus in the Council. It was ruled out on a question of order. Being a bill which affected the revenue it was decided to have been irregularly introduced and was consequently thrown out. So we may expect no Prohibitory Law this year at least.

Although we have little doubt that amajority of the people in the country may be in favor of a Prohibitory Law, still we do not conceive that anything will be lost by a little delay. Similar laws have recently been passed in Illinois and New York, and perhaps we will be gainers by waiting until we see the operation and effect of the laws passed in those States. Already we observe there have been the most serious riots in Chicago in consequence of the Liquor Law, and the military had to be called out in great force to preserve the peace and safety of the City. What will be the consequence of an attempt to enforce the law in New York, Heaven only knows. But it is more than probable that the most serious and fatal consequences will ensue. Already it appears that difficulties have arisen which bid fair to undo much of the reformatory work of the indefatigable Mayor of that city. By the law recently passed by the Legislature of New York, no licences can be issued after the first of May, but the Probibitory part of the law does not come into operation until July 4th. The licenses in New York all expire on May 1st, and it has been decided by the legal advisers and authorities of the city, that as no licenses can be granted and the old law regulating the liquor traffic is repealed, any and every person who pleases, can sell liquor in any quantity without any license. We believe that a law will eventually be framed which will, to a great extent, do away with intemperance, but we do not believe such an one has yet been concocted. If we notice the operation of the different laws passed in different States, it is very likely that we may yet be blessed with an act which will in a great measure embody the beneficial and effectual parts of those acts hitherto passed elsewhere, without being tainted with the obnoxious portions thereof.—Journal and Express.

Normal School Teachers.

At the close of the winter session of the Normal School, 16th ultimo, we understand that, not only were there applications, with the offer of a liberal salary for every teacher, male and female, that was entitled to a certificate, but that there were a considerable number of applications which could not be supplied. The salaries offered to teachers were very much higher than were ever offered before. A number of applications for both male and female teachers, offering very high salaries, have been received at the Education Office since the close of the winter session. In all cases the applications were for teachers who had been trained in the Normal School. Nothing can show more strongly the high value placed on the services of this class of teachers, and the great encouragement that teachers and young persons intending to be teachers, have, to avail themselves of the advantages of the Normal School. With a view to afford every possible aid to young persons thus to qualify themselves for success and usefulness, the Council of Public Instruction have decided, in addition to free instruction and the use of books, to aid each student in obtaining a second as well as first class certificate, at the rate of five shillings per week, during each session, payable at the end of the session, on the students' obtaining, after examination, either a first or second class Provincial Certificate of qualifications as a teacher.

The summer session of the Normal School commences on the 15th May, and closes on the 15th October. Candidates must apply during the first week of the session.

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

16TH VIC. CAP. 85 DEPARTMENTAL ORDER, No. 2.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
Quebec, 12th May, 1853.

In virtue of the authority of the third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed in the sixteenth year of Her Majesty's Reign, and chaptered eighty-five, intituled, "An Act further to amend the Laws relating to Duties of Customs," it is ordered that the following packages be chargeable with duty, viz: all packages containing Spirits, Wines, Cordials or Liquids of any kind in wood, Bottles, Flasks, and all Packages of Glass Ware or Earthen Ware, the Sugar, Molasses, Syrups, Treacle, Coffee, Rice, Tobacco, Flour, Provisions, and no deduction to be allowed for the weight or value of the paper or string, covering Sugar, &c. All packages, containing Soap, Candles, Pipes, Nails, Chains, Paints Spices, Nuts, Vermicelli, Macaroni, Glass Tin, Canada Plates, Tins, Trunks and Jars containing Merchandise, and all other packages in which the goods are usually exposed for sale, or which necessarily or generally accompany the goods when sold. BUT MORE ESPECIALLY TO THE INHABITANTS OF BRANTFORD,
And the surrounding Country,

A Scientific Museum and Reading Room,

WHERE all the lovers of human progress and perfection may investigate and apply the sciences of PHYSIOLOGY and PHRENOLOGY in harmony with all other sciences, so as to obtain a correct knowledge of themselves and the laws that govern them, and the universe as ordained by our Creator.

In the Museum there will be Casts, Masks, and Engravings of great and noted characters of various parts of the world, such as Sir Walter Scott, Napolean Bonaparte, Emmett, the great Poet, and a great many others too numerous to mention, which can be seen in the Museum.

ADMISSION FREE.

Rooms over Mr. JOHN H. MOORE'S Store "Emporium," Second Story, Colborne Street,—entrance on Market Street outside, up first flight of stairs, where Mr. PERSONS will make examinations in the above Sciences, give instructions as to the Laws of Life and Health, point out talents, their various kind and degrees, and how to apply them to the best advantage, in whatever Trade, Business or Profession you may be engaged in, and also for what you are best adapted to pursue most successfully in any of the various occupations in life.

CHARTS

Will be given with the greatest care and accuracy, both written and printed, or either. Printed Charts, containing the whole Science of Physiology, Phrenology, and Physiognomy, highly and beautifully illustarted with one hundred engravings, giving and explaining the two extremes of development, large and small, in a scale range ing from one to twenty-one degrees, which enable the individual to read character at first observation, in any attitude, place, or position, including rules for finding the Phrenological organs, and directions for making examinations. Price five shillings, currency, including examination.

Applications will be gratefully received for visiting Families or Parties at their own residences, in any part of this town.

Orders will be received for any of Fowlers & Wells' publications, wholesale or retail, and promptly attended to.

I consider written descriptions of inestimable value, for which reason I have given this department a more thorough investigation.

Orphans, Widows, and the Poor, will receive verbal examination free of charge.

Hours of attendance from 9 o'clock, a.m., until 10 o'clock, p.m.

WILLIAM PERSONS.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were

As Mr P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.

Brantford, December 26, 1854.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE
American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,
Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction books (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,

A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces.

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

TERMS—Invariably in Advance.

One Copy, 2s. 6d. Five copies, 10s. Eight copies 15s; and at the same rate for any larger number.

A collection of choice flower seeds, recently imported from Europe, will be distributed to patrons of the paper, and such as get up Clubs of eight or more subscribers for the work.

All subscriptions commence with the volume, the first number of which will be issued on the first of January, 1855.

Specimen numbers, showbills, &c., sent free to applicants.

☞ Postmasters and all friends of agricultural improvement are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Farmer.

☞ Subscription money, properly mailed and registered, may be sent at my risk.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

BELIEVING in the necessity of measures to further promote Literature, General Intelligence, Active Benevolence, the Progress of Liberal Views, Free Discussion, and Brotherhood among Christian Denominations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now matured to array the classes of Her Majesty's subjects against each other, the increasing class on the grounds of the complexion and creed and origin of the latter, we pledge ourselves to do all in our power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union, and in our private capacities as citizens, 1st. To promote a healthy harmony and cordiality of feeling among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd. To encourage the Press, especially that Press, or those Presses, in Canada which we shall find to be the watch-tower to notify the approach of the enemy, and the unjust imputations, relative to sectarianism made by the United States and this country, who would secure a policy for emigrants, formerly bond- and free- from White emigrants who may and do settle in the British Provinces in preference to go to or to look upon the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the dangerous doctrine that God's children of different complexions, cannot live together under the British Lion in British America, unless those of darker hue, become "hewers of wood and drawers of water" to those of lighter complexion; to all in our power to remove these and such like stains from the face of the earth, and particularly as exhibited in Great Britain, to check its progress in America, and to obliterate it from both. To encourage the rising generation in literary, scientific, and mechanical efforts. 6th. As a nucleus of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART. III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s. 6d. cur'y.

ART. IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s. 3d.

ART. V.—The Committee of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed, also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being.

Information Wanted

OF MRS. SIDNEY JACKSON, who left the State of Pennsylvania, about the time that the Fugitive Slave Law was passed, and who came to Canada, leaving some property in the above-named State. PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.

Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,

AND

The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress, &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humorous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year.

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance; Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies, - - - - - per annum $ 5
8 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $10
13 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $15
20 do (and 1 to the getter up of the Club) $20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice.

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

GOOD BOOKS BY MAIL!

From Household Words.

PASSING CLOUDS.

Where are the swallows fled?
Frozen and dead,
Perchance upon some bleak and stormy shore,
Oh, doubting heart!
Far o'er the purple seas,
They wait in sunny ease,
The balmny southern breeze,
To bring them to their nothern homer once more.

Why must the flowers die?
Prisoned they lie
In the cold tomb, heedless of tears or rain.
Oh, doubting heart?
They only sleep below
The soft white ermine snow,
While winter winds shall blow,
To breathe and smile upon you soon again.

The sun has hid its rays
These many days;
Will dreary hours never leave the earth?
Oh, doubting heart!
The stormy clouds on high
Veil the same sunny sky,
That soon (for spring is nigh)
Shall wake the summer into golden mirth.

Fair hope is dead, and light,
Is quench'd in night,
What sound can break the silence of despair?
Oh, doubting heart!
The sky is overcast,
Yet stars shall rise at last,
Brighter for darkness past,
And angels' silver voices stir the air.

Miscellaneous.

Our Cinderella.

It needed no sceond glance, when we first employed Our Cinderella, to discover that she was a real indigenous London plant, that had grown in some stifling court, where the sun, when it shines there at all, only reveals hot beds of filth, while what little air enters, just stirs up the poisonous gasses which cannot escape, to float into the houses, and be inhaled by the short-lived and fever-fed inhabitants. She was one of that class of precocious children, who, at the first look, can pick out the largest fried fish, the biggest ha'porth of damaged fruit, or through 'ntricate windings and arched passages lead you direct in the dark, to the low public-house that gives a farthing change out of the penny paid for half a pint of beer. She seemed as if she had never been properly a simple child, but had come into the world with her little head filled with strange cunning notions, which caused her to begin to think seriously as soon as she was born. She was never sent to school, saving when her mother went out to a day's cleaning in winter; then she was turned into a little back-room in the court, and left, like others of her class, to the care of a deaf old woman, with a piece of dry bread and a drink of water when the pipe that supplied the whole court was not frozen, for as her mother said, "the two-pence a week she paid came cheaper than leaving her with a bit of fire." In fine weather, however, she was always left free to run anywhere.

Before she was selected to fill our vacant Cinderellaship, she had, to use her own words, "been out to nu'ss Mrs. Smith's baby for her wittles; then she lit the fires and fitched the gin and beer for the washerwoman at the laundry; after that she was kept to answer the door, run errands, and clean a bit at a lodging-house; but she caught sich a cold through washing up in the damp cellar that she could n't do the work, and so they paid her half a week's wages (which was three-pence), and sent her home." She introduced herself with a single knock at the door, and a "Please do you want a girl to help, clean, or anything?" Her earnest-looking eyes and 'plain unvarnished tale,' were her greatest recommendation. There are many patient and painstaking people in the world that spend weeks in teaching a parrot to talk, or a dog to play a few fantastic tricks, who would have been driven to their wits' end before they had given Our Cinderella a week's trial. We thought her of more value than many Polls and Pugs; and making patience a duty, and endurance the test of fulfilling it, encouraged her at times to talk, and gathered information from her conversation, and knowledge from her shrewd tricks, far more instructive and amusing to ourselves than we ever could have got from bird or beast.

She made her first appearence in her mother's old bonnet and shawl; and when her offer was accepted, she uttered her "thank you kindly" with such a cheerful lighting up of her old-fashioned intelligent countenance, as to draw the eye away from her rough unkempt hair and dirty neck and shoulders, so suddenly revealed, when she threw off those outward trappings, and stood with her lanky long arms eager, ready and willing to do her utmost to earn an honest penny. What a contrast she was to the little haughty minx, who with the curtain of her bonnet lowered to the very nape of her bit of a neck, and her nose pointing up like a chicken's beak after it has drunk, had with a swing, bounce, and a slam of the door, vacated her Cinderellaship the week before, "bekawse she could nt' have a 'dayr' to herself to go to Green'ich Fair!" Our new girl did, indeed, rub and scrub in her peculiar way—sweeping and washing the space occupied by a chair, then dusting the latter and replacing it so that by the time she had finished her dustings and sweepings, the old dust had settled down upon the furniture as quietly as if it had never been disturbed. Then her poor rent shoes, which, "a world too wide," were ever coming off: and sometimes the tap of the water-butt would be pouring into one, while she was scouring away in some corner with the other on, utterly unconscious of her loss; and when told of it, would only reply with "I's ailers been hewsed to having my feet wet, and don't feel it. She had never heard of any objection to using the same towel to wipe up the plates and dishes as she dried her hands and face with, to say nothing of her neck, which, when at home she washed once a week, for Our Cinderella was very regular in her way. Her stockings were at first always falling about her feet, and she trod as softly over the floor as a feather-footed bantum-fowl, while the tops covered the unsightly holes in the heels. At her first experiment in cookery, she dressed the potatoes in the kettle; and when the sauce-pans were pointed out, she said "she alters biled the taturs in the kittle at home, and wrinched it out a'ter before she put in the tea-water; and so did her mother."

Nearly everything which would take the impression, was for a long time stamped with Cinderella, "her mark;" there were traces of her little, industrious and dirty fingers on the table-cloth, in the butter and sugar, on the bread, on the new bonnet and shawl of her mistress, which she had been trying on to see how she looked in them; for she would use her fingers to scrape up the cinders, and as to putting on the old gloves that were given to her for the purpose while she scoured the pots and pans, she fairly laughed at the proposition as a joke and put them away somewhere to be worn on Sunday. Having herself suffered cold, hunger and every other privation, she was always an urgent pleader for the beggars that knocked at the door; and her "Oh, please there's sich a poor 'oman, with a dear sweet babby in her arms so like our little Ellen, and she only axes for a bit of bread; and they do look so hungry, please," never failed to soften us, though we knew the woman would exchange the broken victuals for gin. The rapidity, however, with which our Cinderella flew to excute her glad mission, and the hearty kiss she gave the child at the door, outbalanced the canting whine of the old imposter.

After we had altered an old bonnet, and made it to fit her, almost the first thing she bought out of her trifling wages was a staring red wreath of cotton flowers with which to decorate it; and when we offered to trim it with neat ribbon, if she would throw the artificial abomination away, she consented; but on inquiry, we found that she had sold it like a true child of the court, to another Cinderella for threepence, which she said "was better than losing the whole shilling."

She had to be reminded many times before we could get her to fasten more than one button at the back of her frock; for through her little bare skinny back was exposed, she seemed unconscious of the cold air the opening admitted. It was also a long and difficult task to persuade her to fasten her shawl when she went out; if it blew off, she picked it up and threw it again over her shoulders, ragardless of the weather or the state of the pavement, for as she said, "she had allers been used to holding it, and fivezes (fingers) was made before pins."

What an eventful day that was in the life of our Cinderella, when we presented her with a five-shilling rosewood work-box, which had a little looking-glass fitted into the inside of the lid. She danced, "oh m'yd," and "well I nevered," as she made some new discovery in the intricacies of the pink cotton lining, clapped her hands, and seemed half-frantic with delight; and then to be her own too?—to keep?—to do what she liked with? This ascertained, she said, "she would be so good;" then she sat down and cried with joy. For days after, whenever we had occasion to enter the kitchen, we were pretty sure to hear the sharp snap of the work-box lid as she closed it; and from the day it first came into her possession, there was a slow, strange, but sure improvement in Cinderella's appearance. No doubt it was occasionally the repository of hard bake, candy, toffy; but then it also contained her glass necklace and string of bugles, which she threw round her neck (and wore as proudly as a countess would her diamonds), when she went to visit her mother in her court. It contained also a penny bottle of "real oil of roses" for her hair; this we ascertained through her having broken it, and inquiring what would take grease out of the much admired pink cotton lining of her treasured box; a disaster that caused her to shed "a few natural tears." After this she took to letting her hair grow long behind, and in a few weeks we saw a little morsel, bound with ribbon, sticking out like the tail of a sparrow; she also put her front hair in paper, but this plan we suppose she abandoned, for we noticed on the following day that there was about as much curl in it as in the kitchen poker. For a long time, after a few of these failures, she gave up buying curl-paper, and used more freely her favourite delusion—"oil of roses." She made some kind of flounces to one of her cotton frocks; but, as we heard her telling the Cinderella next door, it made her dress too short, so she let it out until she got her new boots, then she should take it up again to show them. Her boots will have the gaudiest coloured tops she can find, and they will burst out at the sides in no time, for she will have them narrow at the toes, as she has heard "that small feet is fashionable."

Many, perhaps, would have seen only her faults, and kept up an incessant carping that would have rendered her poor life miserable; many perhaps, who might have had children of their own, and, but for more fortunate circumstances, would have been some other body's Cinderella. Though it was not pleasant to find her rough unmistakeable hair clinging to our own brush, we endured the annoyance once or twice till we could supply her with a cheap hair-brush; for such peccadilloes showed that she had a wish to improve her appearance—to advance instead of falling back; and the thought of discharging her never entered our head. Though the little cuffs she made for herself only served to render the dirt on her wrists mere visible, this was not long the case; for the same taste that led her to aspire to a better style of dress, caused her to become more cleanly in her person. As she advanced in collars and cuffs, so she abandoned purchasing penny crabs, eating picled eels in the streets, and drinking sun-heated ginger beer; nor were there any longer signs of shell-fish in the ash-bin. That look of slovenliness about the feet was gone; her boot-laces were neatly fastened, instead of dangling like snares about her feet, that threatened every moment to overthrow her. She now took more heed of her steps. I heard the baker's new man, not many weeks ago, call her "Miss" as he delivered the bread; and though in my eye he looked a cunning artful rascal, who would not keep his place long—which has since proved true—yet Cinderella cannot for a moment believe that it was he who gave her the bad sixpence she took that day in change. I dare say she was too busily engaged with the compliment he paid her, to think of looking after her change. I sometimes fancy, when I see an intelligent light breaking through her good-natured countenance, and beaming out of her bright earnest eyes, that a new spirit has taken its abode in her not ungraceful body, and that many of those old shrewd, selfish feelings are dead, which lived within her when she breathed only the foul air of the corrupt and corrupting court.

And now she no longer slams to the kitchen-door with a haughty toss of the head, and a "Well, I'm sure it's like your imperence," when the young butcher calls; but if it is only a pound of chops she orders, she allows him to bring it home; and when he has nothing else to leave, he is continually bringing in something or other for the cat. She thinks he is one is of the finest horsemen in the world; for when he rides by with his basket, and sees her either at the door or window, he is sure to start off at a "butcher's gallop." She has bought a shiling tea-tray, in the centre of which is something intended for a parrot, with a couple of cherries in its beak. It is the pride of her heart; and after having dusted it, which she she does several times a day, she will stand with her head aside admiring it, for she thinks it "so much like nature." Let us leave her to the worshipping of her few misshapen household gods; perhaps through her little temple—the kitchen—she sees down the long dim vista a far away home of her own to which hope often points. In time she will show all her treasured purchases to the young butcher, for we have more than once stumbled upon him in the kitchen; and the first time she blushed, and said in a trembling voice,—"Please, it's only William," as if we had not known him for the last five years; and he touched the brightest and largest portion of his sueted hair, muttered something about "keeping company," though it needed no confession, for we found it out long ago that he was "head over ears" in love with Our Cinderella. We have frequently heard her singing over her work of late—

"Wilt thou love me then as now."

which shows that she is thinking over her "intended change" very seriously.—Chambers's Journal.

COURTING IN CONNECTICUT.

'Twas Sunday night in Podunk valley,
In clear cold wintry weather;
Josiah Perkins and his Sally
Sat by the fire together.

'Twas no new-fashioned iron case
With fancy work adorning,
But a real old-fashioned fire-place,
On purpose made for warming.

The crackling wood in cheerful blaze
Around the room was throwing
It's heat in bright and ruly rays,
And on their faces glowing.

The apples by the chimney rug
Were slowly getting warmer;
The cider in the pewter mug
Was bubbling in the corner.

A wooden settle, firm and good,
Their loving forms supporting;
'Twas made of seasoned white pine wood,
And just the time for courting.

At one end Sally stuck like pitch,
While Josiah seemed to fear her,
But after a while he gave a hitch,
And got a little nearer.

Sal cast her eyes down—looked quite tame,
Though very sweetly blushing;
While all the blood in Josh's frame
Seemed to his face a-gushing.

He hitched again and got quite near—
He could not then resist her;
He called her his own Sally dear,
Then bashfully he kissed her.

Good gracious; she gave a start from him,
Her anger did not smother—
She said if you do that again,
Now Josh, I'll tell my mother.

They soon made up, and she came back,
And calmed her agitation;
When last I saw them through the crack,
They were kissing like tarnation.

MR. PEPPER'S WIFE.

HOW HE SHUT HER UP.

"Mrs. Pepper, I labor under the impression that it is high time that you were getting breakfast. As my former housekeeper understood all my wishes with regard to these things, I found it unnecessary to give any orders respecting them; but with you it is different. As you have never got a meal in this house, of course you know nothing of the regulations of the household.

"In the first place you will make a fire in the kitchen, put on the kettle, &c.; then you will make a fire in here. That done, you will cook the breakfast and bring it in here, as I have always been accustomed to taking mine in bed, and do not consider it necessary to depart from the custom on your account; but should you prefer it, you can eat yours in the kitchen, as it is perfectly immaterial to me."

This occurred the morning after Mrs. Pepper went to housekeeping. Mrs. Pepper was a sensible woman—she made no reply to Mr. Pepper's commands; but as soon as her toilet was finished, she left the room, and sitting down in the kitchen, she thus ruminated:

"Make the kitchen fire! Yes, I'll do that. Then make a fire in the bedroom! I'll see to that too. Then take the breakfast to his bedside! Just see if I do!" And then Mrs. Pepper sat and thought deeply for a few minutes, when, apparently having arrived at a satisfactory conclusion, she proceeded to business.

Having got a nice fire kindled in the kitchen, she carried some coal into Mr. P.'s apartment, and filled up his stove, having first ascertained that there was not a spark of fire in it. That duty performed, she next prepared the breakfast, of which she partook with a great relish; and after matters and things were all set to rights in the kitchen, she went down town on a shopping excursion.

Meanwhile Mr. Pepper began to grow impatient. He "labored under the impression" that the atmosphere of his room did not grow warm very fast, and he began to feel unpleasantly hungry. Peeping out from behind the bed-curtains he saw how affairs were with regard to the stove. Something like a suspicion of the real state of affairs began to dawn upon his mind. He listened for a few minutes, but all was still about the house.

Hastily dressing himself, he proceeded to investigate the affair. He soon comprehended the whole of it, and was very wrathful at first; but he comforted himself with the reflection that he had the power to punish Mrs. P., and he felt bound to do it, too. After some search he found the remains of the breakfast of which he partook with a gusto, and then sat down to wait for Mrs. P. She was a long time in coming, and he had ample time to nurse his wrath. While sitting there he thus soliloquized:

"That ever I, Philander Pepper, should be so treated, and, by a woman, too, is not to be believed. I can't believe it, no, nor I won't either. But she shan't escape that's certain; if she should, my reputation for dignity would be forever gone! For havn't I told Solomon Simpleton all along how I was going to make my wife stand round, and how I was going to make her get up and make the fire every morning, and let me lie abed, and how I was going to shut her up, and feed her on bread and water, if she dared to say she wouldn't do it?"

"A cosy little arrangement, Mr. Pepper," said a soft voice behind him.

Mr. P. started up, and there stood Mrs. P. right behind his chair, laughing just as hard as she could. Mr. Pepper put on a severe look.

"Sit down in that chair madam," he said, pointing to the one he had just vacated, "while I have a little conversation with you."

"Now I shall be pleased to know why you did not obey my orders this morning, and where you have been, all the forenoon?"

"Where have I been this forenoon, Mr. Pepper, I have not the least objection to tell you; I have been down town doing a little shopping. I have purchased some lovely napkins; just look at them," said she, holding them up demurely for his inspection; "I only paid a dollar apiece for them—extremely cheap, don't you think so!" she added.

Mr. Pepper was astonished; how she dared to turn the conversation in this way was a mystery to him. Suddenly his bottled wrath broke loose. Turning fiercely upon her he said—

"Betsy Jane, you disgust me; you seem to make very light of this matter, but it is more serious than you imagine, as you will find to your cost presently. If you do not immediately beg my pardon in a submissive manner, I shall exert my authority to bring you to a proper sense of your misconduct, by imprisoning you in one of my chambers until you are willing to compromise strict obedience to my wishes."

At the close of this very eloquent and dignified speech, Mr. Pepper drew himself up to his full height, and stationed himself before Mrs. P., ready to receive expressions of sorrow and penitence; he had no doubt that she would fall down at his feet, and say—

"Dear Philander, won't you please forgive me this time, and I'll never do so no more!"

And he was going to say, "Betsy Jane, you'd better not;" but instead of doing all this what do you think she did? Laughed him right in the face!

Mr. Pepper was awful wrathy. He spoke up in a voice of thunder, and said:

"Mrs. Pepper, walk right up stairs this very minute, and don't you let the grass grow under your feet while you are going neither. You have begun your antics in good season, Mrs. Pepper, but I'll have you know that it won't pay to continue them any length of time with me, Mrs. Pepper. Again I command you to walk up stairs."

"Well, really, Mr. P., it is not at all necessary for you to speak so loud—I am not so deaf as all that comes to; but as for walking up stairs I have not the least objection to doing so, if you will wait until I have recovered from my fatigue; but I can't think of doing so before."

"But you must, Mrs. P."

"Then all I've got to say is this, you'll have to carry me, for I won't walk!"

Mr. P. looked at his wife for a moment with the greatest astonishment; but as she began to laugh at him again, he thought to himself—

"She thinks I won't do it, and hopes to get off in that way; but it won't do; up stairs she's got to go, if I do have to carry her; so here goes," and taking the form of his lady in his arms, he soon had the satisfaction of seeing her safely lodged in her prison, and carefully locking her in, he stationed a little red-headed youth on the front door-steps to attend to callers and also to see that Mrs P. did not escape; and then he betook himself to a restaurant for his dinner, and after despatching that, he hurried off to his office, and was soon engrossed in business.

About the middle of the afternoon, our young sentinel rushed into the office, never stopping to take breath:

"Mr. Pepper had better run home just as fast as he can, for that woman what's shut up be making an awful racket, and she be tearing around there, and rattling things the distressingest kind, and if she beant splitting up something or other, then I don't know what splitting be!"

Without waiting to hear more, Mr. P. seized his hat, and hurried off home at a most undignified pace.

Opening the hall door, he stole up stairs as carefully as possible, and applying his eyes to the keyhole, he beheld a sight which made him fairly boil with rage.

Mrs. P. was sitting in front of the fire-place reading his love-letters. The one she was engaged in perusing at that particular moment, was from a Miss Polly Primrose, who it appeared had once looked favorably on the suit of Mr. Pepper; but a more dashing lover appearing on the scene, Miss Polly sent him a letter of dismissal, promising her undying friendship, and accompanying the same with a lock of her hair, and some walnut meats.

But it was not the love letters alone that made Mr. P. so outrageous. He had been something of a traveller in his day, and had collected a great many curiosities in his rambles, which he had deposited in a cupboard in the very room where he had confined Mrs. P., and she had got at them.

She had split up an elegant writing-desk with his Indian battle axe, in order to have a fire, as the day was rather chilly. In one corner of the fire-place was Mr. P.'s best beaver filled up with love-letters.

On a small table, close to Mrs. P., was a beautiful flat China dish, filled with bear's oil, in which she had sunk Mr. P.'s best satin cravat, and having fired one end of it, it afforded her sufficient light for her labors—for Mr. P. had closed the blinds, for the better security of the culprit.

On some coals in front of the fire, was Mr. P.'s silver christening bowl, in which Mrs. P. was popping corn, which she ever and anon stirred, with the fiddle-bow, meanwhile, occasionally punching up the fire with the fiddle, for Mr. P. had with commendable foresight, removed the shovel and tongs.

Mr. P. condesended to peep through the key-hole, until he had obtained a pretty correct idea of what was going on within. Never was a Pepper so fired as he. He shook the door, it was securely fastened within, and resisted all his efforts to open it. He ordered Mrs. Pepper to open or take the consequences; but as she did not open it, it is to be presumed that she preferred the consequences. Mr. Pepper darted down stairs like a madman.

"I must put a stop to this" he thought, "or I shall not have a rag of clothes to my back."

Procuring a ladder, he began to mount to the bedroom; but Mrs. P. was not to be taken so easily. She knew that he had left the door unlocked, for she examined it as soon as he had left; but she had no idea of letting him have the benefit of her fire; so hastily seizing several bottles of cologne, she threw the contents upon the fire, and in a few minutes had the satisfaction of seeing it entirely extinguished. That duty performed, she left the apartment, and locking the door, she stationed herself in a convenient position to hear everything that transpired within.

In a few moments Mr. P. was safe in the apartment and as soon as he had closed the window, he stood bolt upright in the middle of the room, and said in a deep voice—

"Jezebel, come forth!"

No answer.

"Jade, do you think to escape?"

Still no response. Mr. P. begins to feel uneasy, and hastily begins to search the room, but had not proceeded far when he hears a slight titter in the vicinity of the door. He listens a moment, and it is repeated. Darting to the door, he attempts to open it, but finds himself a prisoner. There is one more chance, he thinks, and hurries to the window; but alas for Mr. Pepper, his wife has removed the ladder, and he cannot escape.

He sits down on a chair, and looks ruefully around him, and presently he arises and picks up a few fragments of a letter which is lying on the carpet, and finds it is from Polly Primrose. He wonders what she has done with the lock of hair.

At this moment his eye falls upon his daguerrotype, which is lying on the table before him—mechanically taking it up he opens it, and sees—what? nothing but his own face. All the rest of him being rubbed off, and around his lovely phiz the missing curl, and the walnut meats are carefully stowed away in the corner of the case. Mr. P. fairly blubbered aloud.

Good! thought Mrs. P., when you find your level, I'll let you out, and not till then. A little wholesome advice will do you good, and I'm prepared to administer it.

How long Mrs. Pepper kept her liege lord in durance vile, deponent saith not, and as to what passed between them when he was released from captivity, we are not any better informed, but of this we are sure, Mr. Pepper might have been seen, a morning or two afterwards, to put his head into the bedroom, and heard say in a meek manner—

"Betsy Jane, I've made the kitchen fire; and put on the tea kettle; won't you please to get up and get breakfast?"

PERSONAL WEAKNESSES.—Suetonius tells us that Caligula and Augustus were the most abject cowards in a thunder-storm; and the Bishop of Langres, D'Escaro, fell in a fainting-fit, whenever an eclipse took place, a weakness which at length proved his death.

TO MY HAT.

Thou'rt hasting to decay, hat,
Thy gloss is growing dim;
And persecuting rains have soaked
The stiffness from thy brim;
And cruel blows have marred thy crown
With many a bruise and break—
But though the nap is done at last,
Thou art no "Wide Awake."

And vaguely through the mists of years,
Remembrance views the time,
When from the hatters crowded shelves,
I bore thee in thy prime;
Then round the circle of my friends
A look of wonder stole,
To view thee on this "dome of thought"
This "palace of the soul."

But never more shall mortal man
Thine ebon lustre praise;
For all things fade, and thou art in
The autumn of thy days;
And as thou now wilt sacred be
To days of wind and storm
My old umbrella shall eclipse
Thy venerable form.

O, faithful friend! when thou shalt cease
To thatch this throbbing brain;
Perhaps, more usefully, thou'lt fill
Some broken window pane;
Or, through the streets, the thoughtless boys
Thy faded form shall kick;
But, whatsoe'er thy fate, I trust
Thou'lt never hold a "brick."

HATS.

"Your bonnet to its right use."—Shakespeare.

Newton observed this Shakesperian injunction by always taking off his hat when he pronounced the name of God. This was a right use. The grandmother of Guy Faux devoted one to a strange use when she bequeathed her best velvet hat to a nephew. I have often wondered if he went to church in it! The grandees of Spain treat their sacred sovereign with less respect than Newton showed for a sacred name. It is the privilege of the grandees of Spain that they may stand with their hats on in the presence of their sovereign. There is but one noble in England so privileged—the head, so to speak, of the DeCourcys, Earls of Kinsale.

It is just six centuries and a half since Philip of France sent over a knight to summon King John to answer for the murder of Prince Arthur, or abide by trial by combat. John had no relish to do either, but he looked round for a substitute willing to meet one of the alternatives. There was a gallant soldier in prison of the name of DeCourcy. He had conquered Ulster for his master, Lackland, and had been rewarded with captivity because he had not done more. His fetters were struck off, and he was asked if he were willing to be champion for John in this bloody arbitrament. "No, not for him!" cried DeCourcy, "but for my country, ay!" The adversaries met, yet did not come to an encounter; for the French knight, not liking the look of his gigantic foe, declined the combat, and so lost his honor. John and Philip, who were together present, directed DeCourcy to give them a taste of his quality. Whereupon the champion placed his helmet upon a post, and, cleaving through the first into the second, his sword stuck so fast in the wood that none but himself could draw it out. "Never unveil thy bonnet, man, again, before king or subject." was the cheap privilege accorded him by the economical John; "but tell us why thou lookedst so fiercely round ere thou didst deal thy dainty stroke." "Because, had I failed, I intended to slay all who had dared to mock me." "By the mass," said John, "thou art a pleasant companion, and therewith Heaven keep thee in good heavers!"

It was long the custom for the DeCourcys to wear their hat, but for a moment, in presence of their respective kings, just for the purpose of asserting their privilege, and then to doff it, like other men. The head of the family, at one of George the Third's drawing-rooms, thinking this not sufficient assertion of his right, continued wearing his court head-piece throughout the time he was in the "presence." The good old King at length extinguished this poor bit of pride, by bluntly remarking, "The gentleman has a right to be covered before me; but even King John could give him no right to be covered before ladies." The rebuke was most effectual; and DeCourcy saw, to his horror, that the entire court, ladies, princesses, courtiers and attendants, were wreathed in a broad girdle of grins "all round his hat."

* * * * *

Hats have been of divers service in battle. The plumed hat of Henry IV. was the rallying point of his followers. In later times, the head-covering was put to good purpose by a cute Highlander. In the peninsular war, one of the 93rd and a French infantry-man came upon one another in a wood. As their pieces were unloaded, they both rushed to the cover of a tree, in order to put their muskets in deadly order; but this done, neither was inclined to look out, least the other should be beforehand with him, and let fly. At length the Highlander quietly put his feathered hat on the end of his piece, and held it a little beyond the tree, as though a head was in it, looking out. At the same moment the impatient Frenchman reconnoitered, saw his supposed advantage, and, from his rifle, sent a ball through his adversary's bonnet; thereupon the bonny Scot calmly advanced with his loaded piece, and took his enemy prisoner without difficulty.

I do not know if it ever occurred to any one that hats had something to do with the dissolution of the Long Parliament; but such is the fact. As soon as Cromwell had declared that assembly non-existent, he flung on his hat, and paced up and down the Parliament Chamber. The members, however, were piqued by such truly cavalier swagger, and would not budge an inch. Cromwell, called in Major Harrison and the guard. The major saw how matters stood, and he felt at once that he could get the ex-deputies out much sooner by courtesy than carbines. Accordingly he approached the Speaker, and, taking off his own hat with much ceremony, he bowed low, kissed the fallen official's hand, detaining it at the same time with such gentle violence that the deposed dignitary was constrained to follow whither the very polite, but unwelcome, republican chose to conduct him. The major led him out of the hall, we are told, "as a gentleman does a lady, the whole Parliament following." Thus a hat in hand helped to do what a hat on head failed to accomplish; and the Long Parliament resisting rudeness, yielded to gallantry, and was demolished for ever.

* * * *

When Sir Edward Coke, in 1645, was trying Mrs. Turner, the physician's widow, as an accessory before the fact in the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury (the poor woman had a penchant for poisoning people, but we have all our little foibles), he observed that she wore a hat, and he bade her take it off. "A woman," said he, "may be covered in church, but not when arraigned in a court of justice." The lady tartly commented on the singularity that she might wear her hat in presence of God, and not in that of man "For the reason," said the judge, "that men with weak intellects cannot discover the secrets which are known to God; and therefore, in investigating truth, where human life is in peril, and one is charged with taking life from another, the court should see all obstacles removed. Besides," he added, "the countenance is often an index to the mind, and accordingly it is fitting that the hat be removed, and therewith the shadow which it casts upon your face." The hat was taken off; but the lady, although a murderess, was modest, and she covered her hair with a kerchief.

Had good Mrs. Turner been like the ladies and gentlemen of Natal, she might have puzzled the chief justice. The Natal "fashionables" wear hats of from half a foot to a foot in height, made of the fat of oxen. They first gradually anoint the head with a purer grease; and this, mixing with the hair, fastens these bonnets on during the lives of the wearers! Or the fashion of the Myantses would have done. These people carry on their heads a slight board, a foot long, and a half of that broad; with this they cover their hair, and seal it with wax. They cannot lie down or lean without keeping the neck straight; and the country being very woody, it is not uncommon to find them with their head-dress entangled in the trees. Whenever they require to comb their hair, once or twice a year, they have to pass a preliminary hour in melting the wax, before they can get their hats off.

Better keep them on than take them off to such poor purpose, as was once observed in the case of one of the celebrities of the Place Royal, Beautru, whose name was a mine of tinsel to the little punsters of Paris, in the reign of Louis XIII. Beautru was bold, haughty, and an inveterate gambler. He was a libertine both as to morals and religion, and the slanderer par excellence of his age. Richelieu had a strong liking for him—proof enough that he was not worth the affection of an honest man. His repartees were more spiced with wickedness than wit. One day, on passing in front of a crucifix in the public streets, he, with an air of humble reverence, raised his hat. "Ah!" exclaimed one who saw the unwonted action, "that is what I call setting a good example." "Very good!" cried the scoffer, pushing his hat firm upon his brows, "but you will be pleased to observe that, though we bow, we are not on speaking terms."

* * * *

While people were laughing at this illustration of pride in Paris, London was being sadly scandalized at a royal illustration of obstinacy. When William III. went to church, it was impossible to induce him to take off his hat. He might indeed doff it during the liturgy, but the preacher was no sooner in the pulpit than on went the ponderous beaver, and up fired the indignation of the beholders. William cared not a jot for their indignation. The Dutch wore their hats during Divine worship, and he had not ceased to be a Hollander simply for having become a King of England. Besides, that ancient and scriptural people the Jews sat in their synagogues with their heads covered, and was he not their most religious and gracious king?—and did it not become him to follow the practice of a Biblical race, when the doing so tended to the increase of his comfort, and jumped with the inclination of his caprices? And so the broad hat was worn, and censure disregarded.

* * * *

Mr. Charles Kean, when once playing Richard, at New Orleans, observed, as he was seated on the throne, and the curtain was rising, that his noble peers wore their hats or caps in his presence. With his truncheon to his lips, he contrived a stage whisper, which said, "Take off your hats; you are in the presence of the king." "And what of that?" roared high-reaching Buckingham, looking round at the audience, and smacking his own cap tighter on his circumspect head; "what of that? I guess we know nothing of kings in this country." The New Orleaners were in raptures and the king sat corrected.

When round hats came in, at first merely for morning or undress wear, but finally became a fait accompli, like that other little matter, the French Revolution, all the young wearers of them (and there were, at first, no others) were denounced as "blackguards" and "highwaymen." The youthful votaries of fashion retorted by nicknaming the three-cornered hats, as "Egham, Staines, and Windsor," in allusion to the three-fingered road-post pointing in that tripartite direction. The flat, folding, cresent-shaped beaver, called a cocked or an opera hat, was still to be seen as late as 1818; and a party of gentlemen returning on foot from Alack's on a summer's morning, with pantaloons tight as the Venitian standard-bearer's, and hats cocked according to the mode, presented a rather martial look. Since that time, the round hat has gained headway; even coachmen only wear the old cocked hat on state occasions; and the ugliest article that ever could be devised for the purpose seems to be planted upon our unwilling brows for ever.—Habits and Men.

THE WORLD COMING TO AN END.—Dr. Cumming, an eloquent Scotch preacher, and a popular theological writer, has published a work on the "Signs of the Times," in which, respecting the question of Time, he affiliates very closely with the views of the Millerites. His theory is, that Christ will come in 1864—that the advent will be what is termed premillenial, or, in other words, that Christ will come before the millenium, and the millenial glories will consist of Christ's personal reign on earth for a thousand years—that the Jews will be literally gathered to Jerusalem to be converted—that the Moslem power is about to expire, not by destruction of the Turks, but by their conversion and absorption into the Church—that Popery will be destroyed by Christ's coming, and not before it. Such are a few of the leading points in his somewhat loosely expressed theory of adventism. —Life Illustrated.

A communication received from Chatham, gives account of an attempt to give new vigor to the begging system by a party named Fairfield, alias "Mr. Bull-Head," who seeks to enlist fugitives in the dirty work, or at least to get their sanction to it. Injury enough has not been done already, in the opinion of this Fairfield, it seems, as he who, at other times, is not slow to dictate that this one or the other should have nothing to do with begging, will, when occasion suits, not only give opinions in its favour, and offer plans for its perpetuation, but hesitates not to receive from these said "poor fugitives," funds to extricate him from troubles he may never have had, as he did last autumn; he now broaches the bolder plan of a mammoth scheme, and so adroitly, that the fugitives are made parties to it.

The wickedness of the proposition is apparent—the man who will unblushingly receive one dollar a piece from the refugees, when among them, at the instance of his own and Mrs. Haviland's public importunities, would countenance begging for them. This same Fairfield is one of those interested in strewing old clothes where he goes. In using an impudent freedom of expression about who among the colored people shall come to the country and who stay away—in pretending to a monopoly of the underground management—and in so far as our observation and knowledge of him go, in his business with the Fugitives, making a nuisance of himself. Our impression of him, when we saw him, was that of a pert, ignorant, but meddling and wilful Michigander, by adoption, but from any and everywhere else in reality—one of the dead weights upon the colored people that should be discountenanced.

In view of one of Mr. Fairfield's callings, our remarks may give offence to some of his worshippers; we cannot help it. Many men equally as conscientious and of far more weight of character are more useful in the same way, and not so exacting as he, who is ever 'billeting' upon families, under protest, and refusing pay on the ground of public services rendered, or asking for and receiving dollars from them; as the business pays him well, other men might as well receive pay also; their patrons would then have the satisfaction of knowing that they would not get paid back in an unwarrantable interference in their own business. Should Mr. Fairfield start a new begging enterprise, he would probably like to be an agent, or if not, get a share of the spoils—the secret at the bottom of most of such enterprises.

The pretence set up by Fairfield and his coadjutor Stanton, is, that the Society they propose is the same as the "True Band" of Amherstburg, a statement palpably false, as the True Band is opposed to begging for Fugitives or receiving old clothes or money, which Fairfield & Co. are not.

The men small enough to encourage such a plan, have no influence for good in Chatham, or elsewhere, we are satisfied, and we do hope that all well disposed citizens will promptly discountenance it, and those urging it.

There was an accidental omission of part of the reply made by the Hon. Sir Allen McNab, to the inquiry of Mr. Larwill, as to the intention of Government respecting Colored Militia, in last week's issue, we give the article this week with the omitted sentence.

SIR ALLAN MCNAB.—With regard to the first part of the honorable gentleman's enquiry, whether it is the intention to form companies of colored people or negroes, he would only say that the government held in high respect loyalty wherever it was to be found, and would respect the loyalty of the colored people of the Province as well as the loyalty of other people—color would not stand in the way. With regard to whether at present colored persons held Her Majesty's Commissions in this Province, there were none; but there were, doubtless, among such persons men who would discharge their duties willingly and creditably to themselves and the country. And with regard to the last question, whether it was the intention of the government to make any distinction of color or race, he would say most pointedly, that it was not the intention of the Government to do so.

☞ Our welcome correspondent, W. S. has, it will be seen, an interesting letter as usual. Had the colored people of the States many more among them so active, watchful and untiring as he—so ready to pursue the common enemy—their work of elevation would be less arduous.

☞ The thanks of the Proprietors of this paper are especially due Mrs. Lucretia Mott, for her generous donation to its support.

The Kansas Outrages—Slave Piracy, &c.

PHILADELPHIA, May 10th, 1855.

When I commenced my last communication, there was a great dearth of Anti-Slavery news; since then, however, a marked change has taken place. The telegraphs and railroads have brought fresh and thrilling reports of sanguinary outrages in Kansas, and inhuman tortures of slaves in Kentucky. In addition, we have had, in this city, a case of kidnapping, and the trial of Captain J. G. Darnaud, for slave piracy; of course, we have, therefore, no further cause to complain of the scarcity of news, only of its character.

With so many horrible phases of cruelty before one's eye, it is puzzling to decide where to begin at, a description or remarks

With regard to the Missourians, they have unmistakably developed their truly tyrannical character. Scarcely can the most blinded keep from comprehending their avaricious purpose, at all hazard, to keep free men, possessing the love of liberty, from enjoying rights in Kansas. They are as good, however, in my opinion, as any other slaveholders in the United States, though they lacked the sagacity to conceal their nefarious purposes, as has formerly been the usual practice with American tyrants. Also notwithstanding the fact of their having marched over to Kansas, by thousands, supplied with loads of rum, and armed with bowie-knives, revolvers, mounted cannons, &c., accompanied with cavalry, by which they made the place of their rage exceedingly terrible—controlling the election by taking full possession of the polls—causing the legal voters, in dreadful consternation, to seek safety in flight!!

Perhaps it is well for the Anti-Slavery cause that the Missourians took the opportunity of showing to the world a distinct specimen of their humanity—temperance, peace, love of liberty, &c.,—especially as northern apologists have done so much harm in misleading foreigners in relation to the true character of slavery in this country Such wholesale brutality as is here brought to light is beyond the possibility of covering up; their lawless deeds will bear undying testimony against oppression the civilized world over!

Perhaps none or but very few have ever supposed that Missouri slaveholders would quietly submit to see northern men establish free institutions in Kansas; a large Free State, lying so contiguous as Kansas does to Missouri, could in no sense be regarded by slaveholders, who derive all their support and pleasures from the unrequited toil of their slaves in any other than a hostile attitude. Though "contented and happy" as their slaves may have been "raised," the master well knows that the temptation, on their part, to take a trip on the underground railroad, would in most cases be irresistable, by "weak flesh"—in case Kansas should be cursed with freedom. It is very natural, therefore, that they should eagerly watch every appearance of danger, and grow violent at the most remote indication that their system of oppression might be disturbed by disapproving neighbors. The Press or the preacher daring to inculcate doctrines, however mildly, adverse to slavery in Kansas, has already been given to understand, as the destruction of one press bears witness, as well as preachers having to escape also, that their agency cannot be tolerated.

Hon'ble A. H. Reeder, Governor of Kansas, being terrified by the diabolical proceedings of his Missouri neighbors, deemed it expedient to leave the scene of disorder, in post haste, to make a visit to Washington, with a view of laying the afflictions of his subjects before the President of the U. S. On the 30th ult, he arrived in Eaton, Pa., the place of his former residence, and met a very enthusiastic reception from his friends; in his speech on the occasion, he confessed that "Kansas was subdued, subjugated and conquered, by armed men from Missouri." He also declared that "the accounts of the fierce outrage and wild violence perpetrated at the election, and published in the northern papers, were in nowise exaggerated," &c.

Though several days have elapsed since the Governor's visit to the President, yet not a word have the public been permitted to hear from him on the subject—how vastly different he was actuated a little over a year ago, when informed that a poor fugitive had been overtaken in Boston, by the hunters, and that sympathy and aid were being extended to said fugitive, from the abolitionists!—unhesitatingly he placed at the disposal of the slave-catchers, all the military force that they might demand, which had the effect to bring them out in the most fearful array, as the citizens of Boston will never forget. Now, slaveholders are the aggressors—hence the muteness of the Executive. True, it would be a great novelty, and sheer inconsistency, on the part of the President, to act otherwise than he seemed disposed to do, in this matter; as the acts of his whole political career, especially during his administration, have always been on the side of oppression. However, after he "meditates" fully over the subject, he may, after all, move in the matter, perhaps with the hope of retrieving, in part, his ruined character, by gaining some political favours.

With the following telegraphic despatch, which appears in this morning's papers, I will leave this subject for the present:

The Kansas Outrages.

CHICAGO, May 8.

The Missouri Argus, of the 1st inst., publishes the proceedings of a mass meeting held at Weston, Mo., at which resolutions were adopted, to the effect that self-defence requires the expulsion of every person aiding in bringing negro slavery into reproach that robbers and traitors have no right to the protection of the law that they ratify the proceedings at the Parkville riot—that they approve the resolutions of that meeting in regard to the Methodists, and add thereto all ministers preaching principles of slavery—and that they have no argument against abolition papers but the Missouri river bottoms, and hemp rope. They pledge themselves to go to Kansas and help to expel those who are corrupting the slaves, and call a grand mass meeting at Parkville on the 5th instant.

SLAVE PIRACY CASE.

The case of Captain Darnaud, charged with being engaged in the slave trade, on board the brig Grey Eagle, has been for the last ten days, before Justice Grier, and Judge Kane, of the United States Circuit Court, of this city, without any sign, as yet, of a speedy termination. The circumstance creates but little if any excitement with any class. And though the evidence seems incontestable against the accused, it would be very strange if our unity-loving Judges, who have so frequently felt it to be their duty to return fugitives to bondage, since the passage of the fugitive law, should not find room in their merciful hearts to let this monster escape the penalty provided for his kind.

The cruel torturing of slaves in Kentucky, alluded to above, reveals a chapter of cruelty compared with which but few parallels are to be found on record; though, doubtless, very frequently known to the American slave.

I had designed to condense from the N. Y. Tribune, a brief account of this shameful and horrid affair; but it is too sickening. I therefore send you the entire article, which I think you will readily publish.

Of the case of kidnapping referred to, I have but little information. In the notice in the daily papers, it was stated that the notorious Alberti had a hand in it.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

MISS M. A. SHADD,—In the Evening Mail of the 2nd April, I observe the following, which shows in some degree how Homœopathy is progressing in the face of powerful opposition:

"A deputation, consisting of the following noblemen and gentlemen, had an interview with Lord Panmure, at his residence in Belgrave Square, on Thursday, the 29th March, 1855, and presented a memorial, praying that a civil hospital at Smyrna, or elsewhere, in the neighbourhood of the theatre of war, might be appropriated for the treatment of our soldiers and sailors, according to the homœopathic system:—The Earl of Essex, Lord Loraine, M. P., General Sir John Doveton, K. C. B., Admiral Gambier, Colonel Wyndham, Colonel Taylor, R.A., and Captain Fishbourne, R.N.—The deputation was introduced by Lord Robert Grosvenor.

"The memorial was signed by twenty-two members of the House of Lords, military and naval officers, and others, and set forth the number of officers and men now serving in the East, who had confidence in no other curative method.

"A memorial of a similar nature was also presented to his lordship, the result of a public meeting in Manchester."

Having had the happiness, in 1842, of knowing the late Dr. S. C. Davids, who was the first, I believe, to practise Homœopathy in Manchester, it is very pleasant to me to observe this movement on behalf of our suffering countrymen taking place in that city—the scene of the gratuitous labours of the lamented Dr. D., for the benefit of the poor, which quickly ripened into an hospital with twenty-five beds, supporting itself; an interesting report of cases treated in which, was published in 1853, by Dr. Henry R. Madden. Yours, truly,

GEO. D. L. HARVEY.

Canadian Prosperity.

Canadians live in an age of improvements, at the present time. Improvements are being effected in all departments of life—from the dairy house of our farmers' guidewives up to some of the great laws and ordinances required for the Government of this great people.—Yes, we say great people, for Canada will compare favorably with any other nation, so far as advancement in all that tends to the elevation—morally and pecuniarily—of her people is concerned. Even our fast brother Jonathan is beginning to have more respect and deference for us. He looks across and says:—"Wall, I calculate, them ere Canucks are not so slow arter all. They begin to understand that they live in the 19th century, and we Yankees will have to pull up or we will be beat." Well, Canadians do not exactly wish to make Jonathan jealous, but they intend that Canada shall no longer stand in the background, but that she shall come out and claim merit for not only what nature has bestowed upon her, but also for the spirit of enterprise, perseverance and integrity which perrades all classes of her people. Canada has the means and facilities for becoming a great nation. Her natural resources are, beyond doubt, equal to those of any nation under the sun, and we are proud to say that she is inhabited by a class of people worthy of her. All that we want in Canada is wise, good and true men to hold the reins of authority, and enact wise and judicious measures for our government and improvement, and then we shall occupy a high position—a position which we are entitled to occupy. We did not intend to write an eulogy about ourselves when we commenced this article, but merely to call, more pointedly than we have yet done, attention to some of the improvements which are being effected in the Postal Department of this province. Our newspapers are soon to be transmitted throughout the country entirely free of postage—which will be a great means of advancing the social, moral and political position of our people. This no one can deny, for who is there that will say that the reading of newspapers and periodicals is not one of the greatest means of advancement and improvement that we have within our reach. Then again, we have the extended money order system in our Post Office, which also betokens a laudable desire on the part of our rulers to benefit the country. This system will be found to be an excellent medium for the transmission of money in small or large sums, to all parts of Canada. No loss can possibly incur to parties sending or receiving money, and the only fault that seems to be found with the system, is that it is rather expensive. The scale is, we think, higher than it should be for large sums, but as the system is open to improvements, we must look for such. Our readers will find the scale of charges and a list of the offices transacting business under this system in our advertising columns. We may return to this subject again, and point out some other improvements which have been made; and some which ought to be made, in order that we may preserve and maintain the spirit of advancement in all our affairs—moral, social, political, and national. —Ayr Observer.

Emigration.

Accounts from England state that the tide of emigration from the whole United Kingdom, has much slackened in its extent during this Spring. Although, undeniably, there are numbers leaving from the west coast of Ireland, at the instance of their friends in the new world; yet, from private letters, we are led to believe that the falling off in the "exodus" is not exceptional in any locality. In the Mersey and the Shannon, packet ships have waited for weeks in expectation of getting their usual complement of passengers, but ultimately they have had to make their voyage with a number considerably short of that which they were chartered to carry. This is traceable to several circumstances; apparently, in the first place, from the numerical decrease in the people from which the emigration was supplied; secondly, from the ameliorated condition of the poor; and, lastly, from the demand for able-bodied persons, caused by the present war, and the increased calls of agriculture and trade. Complaints are at present pretty generally made by the old country farmers—a class proverbially given to grumbling, however—on account of the scarcity of farm laborers. And in many counties, it is said, that the militia have monopolised the supply of able-bodied men, on whom the periodical demands of agriculture formerly depended. Hence, we believe that the emigration to this continent, during the year, will show a considerable diminution. Whether that diminution will pertain to Canada, however, is another question. Whatever the emigration for the current year may be, Canada will get more than her former proportion of it. In Germany, and throughout the United Kingdom, the native American movement is pretty generally understood, and we may depend upon it, that people will be naturally more inclined to adopt that country as their home, which awaits them with a welcome, than that one which offers to treat them as intruders, and tells them that they are not wanting within its limits.

This year will see the commencement of a new era in Canadian immigration. War taxes and war prices are felt severely by the English middle classes, and those who have hitherto lived respectably on fixed annuities, are now reduced to the most straitened circumstances. These people can see nothing before them but progressive poverty so long as the war continues; and they naturally desire to get rid of the responsibility of war imposts, by fixing their abode in a country which is not subject to them. The diffusion of information is all that is required to gain for Canada the preponderance of advantages resulting to new countries, from this state of things.—Prototype.

☞ A number of farmers living in the vicinity of North Augusta, in the County of Leeds, the Prescott Telegraph says, are in a destitute situation, having little to eat, and being totally unable to obtain seed to put in the ground, owing to the destruction of their crops by fire last summer. The same paper speaks diparagingly of the appearance of the fall wheat in the vicinity of Prescott, and says many of the fields present a black and decayed appearance.

☞ A geological survey of Canada, now in progress, is said to show that the Provinces are richer in most minerals, except coals than even the United States.

☞ The new prohibitory liquor law of New Brunswick has received the signature of the Lieutenant Governor. It comes into force on the 1st of January next.—Exchange.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

Kansas a Slave State.

To the Editor of the New York Tribune.

SIR,—I see by the Tribune, of which I am a constant reader, that you are sorely exercised on the subject of 'freedom or slavery in Kansas.' Now, mark my words, if you please. We shall beat you. We shall firmly establish slavery in that Territory, because it is for our interest to do so. And what is more, we don't care a d—n what the Northern people may say. They may wince, but they must swallow the dose. We shall not take the trouble even to gild the pill. If necessary, we can buy you up at any time. Besides, the PATRIOTS of the North are with us every one of them. One Augustus Cæsar Dodge, one Harry Hibbard, one Touccy is worth ten dozens of the vermin who are croaking against slavery. Briefly, we shall beat you. The potent to accomplish the end will be used. If necessary, we can throw Scotch snuff in your eyes, and then kick you all to our hearts' content. Huzzah for KANSAS.

ANOTHER NEW TERRITORY.—A letter from New Mexico to the New Orleans Picayune states that the Legislature of that territory have some thoughts of memorializing Congress to erect a new territory out of the southern portion of New Mexico. The present territory is eight hundred miles long, six hundred and fifty broad, and is inhabited by one hundred thousand people. The tract of country newly acquired from Mexico has given it a comparatively large population in its southern part, and the section is now so far removed from Santa Fe, the seat of Government, and the country is so dangerous and difficult for travellers, that communication is for all ordinary purposes impracticable. The proposed territory is to be called Pimeria; it is said to possess vast agricultural and mineral resources, and to be capable of supporting a large population. The letter to the Picayune states that it already contains a larger population than either Oregon, Washington, Minnesota, Kansas or Nebraska contained, when they were erected into territories.

☞ Capt. James G. Daman, late of the brig Grey Eagle, is on trial for his life at the U. S. Circuit Court in Philadelphia, being charged with landing a cargo of slaves on the coast of Cuba, by bribing an officer, and received for his cargo several hundred dollars which was shared among the owners, officers and crew of the vessel. Several of the counts of the indictment charge the vessel with being a foreign one, but allege the defendant to be a citizen of the United States.

COLORED SCHOOL BILL.—We are happy to announce that the Bill entitled 'An act in amendment of "An act concerning Public Schools," which provides that 'In determining the qualifications of scholars to be admitted into any public school, or any district school in this Commonwealth, no distinction shall be made on account of the race, color, or religious opinions of the applicant or scholar,' has received the signature of the Governor, and is now a law.—Liberator.

WHAT WILL GREELEY SAY?—A fair of colored people of New Orleans has just come off, which realized the handsome sum of two thousand five hundred and seventy dollars. The "colored ladies" are out in a card in the Picayune, thanking the people of New Orleans for their liberal patronage of their efforts. The objects of the fair were benevolent and religious.—American Organ.

Without waiting to hear what the gentleman interrogated will say, the Organ itself might say—indeed, has said—that a dozen or so of colored persons, convened in this city for a no less praiseworthy purpose, were arrested, imprisoned, and fleeced out of ten or twelve dollars each, by our magnanimous corporation.—National Era.

Terrible Tragedy in Beloit, Wis.

From a private letter at Beloit, we learn the following particulars of a dreadful tragedy which occurred in that place on the morning of the 23rd inst.

The wife of a citizen of that town was awakened from her sleep, on the morning of the 23rd, by a noise which she heard in an adjoining apartment. In a moment more she saw a gleam from a dark lantern, held by a man in that room, and, screaming with affright, awoke her husband, who was sleeping at her side. As he sprang from the bed, the intruder fired at him with a pistol, the ball just missing his head and burying itself in the pillow. Snatching a double barrelled gun from the wall, he discharged both barrels at the intruder. The contents of one barrel entered the man's head, and the other his body, killing him instantly. Leaving the body where it fell, the gentleman and his wife proceeded to the nearest neighbour, told him what had happened, and induced him to return with them to his house. But imagine the feelings of the neighbor, himself a man universally esteemed and respected, to recognize in the mangled body of the dead robber, his own son!

Upon returning to his house, the father found his son's room unoccupied, the window open, and a rope ladder extending from the window to the ground.

The gentleman who shot the robber had suffered the loss of two gold watches some time before, in a mysterious manner, and now attributes their theft to this person.—Chicago Tribune.

FIVE PERSONS STARVED TO DEATH.—The schooner John Clark, Capt. McRay, was lost on her passage from New York to Jacmel, St. Domingo, by becoming waterlogged. The captain and four of the crew perished of starvation; and two men, who were left alive, were taken off and brought to New York on the 7th inst. They report that they had nothing to eat for eight days previous to being taken off.

Facts of Slavery in Kentucky.

A CASE OF CRUELTY AND TORTURE.

PARIS (Ky.) April 10, 1855.

On Monday, the 12th of March last, a Circuit Court, for Bourbon County, commenced. A Grand Jury of sixteen housekeepers were empanneled and sworn. On Tuesday, at noon, the Jury came from their room into open Court, when the following was read:—"An indictment vs. Alpheus Lewis, Jr. and Margaret his wife, for cruel and inhuman treatment of slaves. A true bill." Upon the reading of which the foreman stated that it was the unanimous wish of the Jury that, if the law authorized it, the Court would proceed to take immediate possession of the slaves specified in the indictment. The case being "something new under the sun," in this latitude, it was kept under advisement until the next morning, when an order was made by Judge Duval, directing the Sheriff to take possession of said slaves. (Sally, a woman of perhaps 20 or 25 years, and Martha, a girl 10 or 12 years of age,) and to summon the said Alpheus Lewis, Jr. and Margaret his wife, to appear in the Bourbon Circuit Court, on Tuesday, the 20th of March, to answer the said charge. Accordingly, the negroes were taken possession of, and placed in the custody of Jos. Porter, our jailor, and the parties summoned as directed.

The next day, Mr. Lewis came to Paris, and employed the best physicians to administer to the wants of his wretched slaves; but, notwithstanding their skill and the rapid improvement made upon them, they were not in a condition that their owner could bring them into Court, and disprove the allegations which were made against him, or rather which were made against his wife. But, on the contrary, when the case was called up in court, the Hon. Garrett Davis, Mr. Lewis' lawyer, remarked, in substance, that the slaves in question were in the possession of the court, and that the Attorney for the Commonwealth could have such order made in the case as he (the Attorney) chose. Whereupon the attorney, Mr. Dickerson, of Georgetown, asked for an order to sell said slaves, according to the statute, of which I subjoin an extract:—

"If the owner of any slave shall treat him cruelly and inhumanly, so as, in the opinion of a Jury, to endanger the life or limb of such slave, or materially to affect his health, or shall not supply his slaves with sufficient wholesome food and raiment, such slave shall be taken and sold for the benefit of the owner. On the petition of any person, verified by oath, or upon the presentment of a Grand-Jury, setting forth substantially, the ill-treatment of the slave, the court shall cause the owner of the slave to be summoned, and may, if it shall appear proper, direct the Sheriff or other officer to take possession of the slave and hire him out, pending the proceeding; and such judgment and orders shall be given by the court as the finding of the Jury shall justify." Art. 4, secs. 2 and 3, Revised Statutes, vol. 2, p. 634.

The court then rendered a decree to that effect, appointing Thos. A Taylor a commissioner, and directing him to advertise said slaves for sale, on Monday, the 2nd day of April, it being County Court-day for Bourbon County. They were advertised by sticking the following paper upon the Court-House door, and in no other way, and at no other place that the writer is aware of:—

"COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF SLAVES.—As Commissioner, under a Decree of the Bourbon Co. Court, at the March Term, 1855, in the case of Alpheus Lewis and Margaret his wife, I will expose to public sale, at the Court-House door, in Paris, on the 2nd day of April next, County Court day for said County, on a credit of four months, two valuable slaves, to wit: a negro woman aged about 25, and a negro girl about 12. Persons wishing to purchase, can see said slaves by calling on J. Porter. Bond, with approved security, will be required, having the force and effect of replevy bond.

"THOMAS A. TAYLOR, Commissioner.

"March 22, 1855."

Notwithstanding we have two newspapers published in Paris, and it is the custom to advertise valuable property sold under a decree of court, in the papers, the commissioner and both of the editors, who are lawyers, and doubtless heard of the case, for it produced more general excitement than any case that was in court, however kept it out of the papers. Why is this so? For answer, it may be said that the predecessor of the editor of The Flag, for a recent notice of the passage of Matt. F. Ward through our town, in which he denominated him as the "great unhung," was attacked shortly afterward in the city of Lexington by the Flournoys, and genteelly caned; and, when he was afterward told that the Flournoys were relatives of the Wards, and that they were influential men too, whose politics were with The Flag, and therefore he ought not to have published such a notice, he replied, "that he did not know they were relatives." In commenting upon this, the editor of the Citizen said that the editor who was caned ought to have known that Ward was related to some one. Both of our editors know that "Alpheus Lewis and Margaret his wife" have many wealthy relations, and it is even yet true that the "rich man hath many friends."

It was evident, however, that the neighbors of Mr. Lewis intended to do all that the law would enable them to do, to correct the evil complained of, and it is generally understood that if there is a repetition of such conduct as has been lately perpetrated, the law will not be called into requisition, inasmuch as it is a very inefficient one,—such conduct, they say, shall not again be known to them, and go unpunished.

It will be observed that our law does not prohibit our tyrants from resupplying themselves with servants, or rather slaves; nor, indeed, does it take from them, or only for a time, those that have been barbarously treated. Mr. Alexander, a merchant of Paris, after seeing these negroes, became very anxious to purchase the elder one, from the fact that he, about two years ago, bought her father and mother at the same time when Mr. Lewis bought Sally, and he found them to be good servants, and wished to buy her, measurably to gratify her parents, not doubting that she too was a good servant, as she was so represented at the sale two years ago, and so her countenance indicated. But he was informed by the sheriff that there would be no use in entertaining such an idea, as Mr. Lewis had made an arrangement to have a negro-buyer at the sale to bid them in for him, as he was determined that they should not be sold to remain in this country. So the sequel proved. They were bid in by Mr. Lewis' agent, and they have been removed to parts unknown. Whether their tortures have ceased, "deponent saith not;" they are evidently not yet in a condition to be taken off for sale.

Mr. Lewis not defending the case, the testimony was not elicited in open court, but it has been freely made known by the Grand Jurors, as presented to them. Before the Jury, one of Mr. Lewis' neighbors, Mr. David Montgomery, of revolutionary descent, testified that on the first Monday in March, which was County court day, the younger girl above spoken ran into his house in a state of complete nakedness, and that her first words besought them "to please let her warm by their fire." Upon examination by this neighbor and wife, the girl was found to have been most cruelly treated. She showed burns that evidently were made with hot irons upon her neck, her face, her hands, under both arms, between her legs, both behind and before, beside bruises upon her head, and bleeding at the ears. She had that evening chill after chill. This neigbour acted humanely and manly, and the miserable girl was soon enveloped in a comforter before his fire, and he sallied out in search of other neighbors, determined to have them witness the horrid spectacle. Unfortunately, nearly all of them were in Paris. He succeeded, however, in finding two, who saw the girl while at his house. He then, in company with one of them went to Mr. Lewis' house—he also being in town. Upon the ringing of the bell, Mrs. Lewis presented herself at the door. A short conversation ensued, in which Mrs. Lewis acknowledged that she had corrected the girl, and that she had bade her never show herself again in her presence. Mr. M. replied that she was in a very bad condition and she had better send for her; upon which the door was shut in their faces. It was also made known to members of the Grand Jury, though not in the Jury-room, by white men in Mr. Lewis' employment, that Sally (who is a grown woman, and, I think the mother of children) was stripped by Mrs. Lewis' directions entirely naked, and her heels tied up to a tree about four or five feet from the ground. She then made a negro man force the pump, and another negro woman direct the hose, so as to drench her with water, while she would stand off a pace and pelt her with stones until she would tire, and then she would take to her more favored method of torture, the hot iron. The reason these men in Mr. Lewis' employment were not summoned before the Grand Jury was, that there was a sufficiency of testimony without them, especally in the case of the younger girl. Had they been summoned, Mr. Lewis would have anticipated the whole proceedings and put the negroes out of the way—a thing that the neighbors were very anxious to prevent, for they had volunteered their information to the Jury, and wished it confirmed by the appearance of the negroes. The writer of this saw the slaves in the jail, in company with divers other gentlemen of Paris and Bourbon County, and I will say that Sally had old scars on her back as large as one's hands; sores upon her hips, thighs and legs, that could scarcely be covered with the palm of the hand. The smaller one's condition has been described above. She came to jail with no other clothing on than a lindsey dress.

You are ready to inquire who are this "Mr. "Alpheus Lewis and Margaret his wife." He is the son of Alpheus Lewis, sen., of Clarke county, Kentucky. Mr. Lewis, sen'r is said to be a member of the Baptist Church, (Calvanistic is the term of distinction in this country,) a man of wealth and reputed to be one of the best of families. Mrs. Lewis' maiden name was Scott, and perhaps she has inherited from her father, Robert Scott, a larger estate than any lady now living in our county. Her father died while she was quite young. Her mother afterward married again. Her mother and step-father are of the same religious faith with Mr. Lewis' father. The step-father occasionally preaches, perhaps regularly. If these parents have brought up "Alpheus and Margaret "his wife" in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, the wise man erred when he said, train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. Their fortune is ample. They spend much of their time in New Orleans, and other cities. Their large estate, in a good neighborhood, in Bourbon county, not being situated on a macadamized road, is not a suitable place for them to dwell in. They purchased a fine piece of land in Gov. McDowell's survey, and built upon it a handsome dwelling after the most approved modern style. They laid out their grounds with taste, made a splendid carriage road, and groups of handsome evergreens decorate their beautiful and extensive yard; so that the traveller, upon the road between Paris and Lexington, (and which, by-the-bye, is said to be one of the finest roads in the Union,) as he passes, would doubtless feel that here was a paradise; for here, nature and art have combined to make this place lovely and enchanting. Oh! shame, that it should be anything else than paradisical! But here is the residence of "Alpheus Lewis, jun., and Margaret, his wife."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" has had an extensive reading in Kentucky. The majority of its readers, I think, deem it a faithful and fair work But some have said that Mrs. Stowe was unjust in representing a master selling his favourite servant, and that she took more pains to depict the Legrees than the Shelbys. It is known, however, that good servants have sometimes been sold; and it is also known that no female character is personated in the book that equals or approximates to Mrs. Lewis in cruelty and inhumanity.

KENTUCKIAN.

☞ A Chinese newspaper is published weekly in California, under the title of Tung-Ngai San-Luk, edited by Lee Kau. The proposed object is to vindicate the Chinese population, established in California, from the aspersions cast upon them by the Americans, and especially by the Governor of California. According to the Tung-Ngai, there are five Chinese clubs flourishing in San Francisco. These clubs furnish beds, fuel, and water to Chinese guests who remain for a short time; also lodging-places and medicines for the aged and sick. According to Lee Kau's journal, the Chinese in California do not number more than 40,000. They acknowledge that there are only 2,000 Chinese women in California, but they say their wives have compressed feet, and are unfit to encounter the winds and waves during an ocean voyage. They complain of the violence and extortion to which they are subjected in California. The Americans have at length decided that the Chinese shall be treated like Indians and negroes, and not allowed to give evidence in a court of justice. At this Lee Kau is indignant, and remarks in an editorial: "When we reflect upon the honorable position that China has maintained for many thousands of years, upon the wisdom transmitted by her philosophers, upon her array of civil and military powers, upon the fame of her civilization, upon the wealth and populousness of her possessions, and then behold the people of other nations heap ridicule upon us as if we were the same as Indians, who wear neither clothes nor shoes, and who live in wild places and in caves, we ask—is it possible that this can be in accordance with the will of Heaven?"

A Pretty Fellow for a Bishop.

According to a Correspondent of the Atlas under the signature of "Clericus," a great cruelty is about to be inflicted on the colonists, if not on the aborigines, of Sierra Leone. The Bishop whose diocess includes that settlement has departed this life, and Clericus says—

"It is naturally expected by the colonists of our West African settlements, that the individual selected as his successor should be in every respect a man of recognised ability. How far this expectation will be fulfilled remains to be proved, but if my information be correct it will be cruelly disappointed, inasmuch as this see, worth upwards of £1,500 per annum, has been offered to an elderly superannuated missionary, formerly many years resident at Sierra Leone, and who at present officiates in a chapel connected with the Church Missionary Society in the neighborhood of London."

Cruelly disappointed. How cruelly? Is the proposed Bishop incapaciated by age? Is he just what a Bishop ought not to be—a disreputable character, the husband of more wives than one, a sot, a brawler, or a money-grubber for example?—if the latter, certainly they will be cruelly disappointed in the Prelate to be appointed to a see "worth upwards of £1,500 per annum." Such disappointment, however, although cruel enough, is nothing to those who are used to it, as the inhabitants of the mother country undoubtedly are, if the colonists are not. But no—the disqualification of the reputed Bishop-elect is of quite another kind, in the view of Clericus; who continues—

"Far be it from me to deny the abilities of this gentleman for the office he enjoys; but it is another and a very different affair if his literary attainment will not bear the test of examination."

Well: but is this so? Clericus simply replies:

"And how could it be otherwise, considering that he was, it is alleged, originally bred a mechanic, and went out to Sierra Leone in the capacity of a Catechist to the Church Missionary Society upwards of 35 years ago."

Originally bred a mechanic. So have been some learned men—and some more than learned. A mechanic—shall we say a tent-maker? Or what does Clericus think of the vocation of a carpenter? That to have been originally bred to that mechanical business, entails disability for the office of Bishop? Oh! Clericus! Is the carpenter's bench so infinitely beneath the episcopal? Are the hands which have once wielded the adze and the axe, and the saw, and the plane, and the gouge, and the chisel, and the augur, and the gimlet, and the centre-bit, to be forever debarred from grasping the crosier? Is the brown paper cap exchangeable on no conditions for the mitre? It was not so at the beginning of the first century of this era. But Clericus evidently considers that we have changed all that—for a superior system. He proceeds, in allusion to the antecedents of the deprecated Bishop:

"I mention this in no invidious spirit: viewing it on the contrary as highly commendable; but something very different is very properly looked for in one who seeks to occupy the distinguished position of a high dignity of the Church; and I venture to maintain, that if this gentleman obtains the Bishopric of West-Africa, it will be an injustice done to the hard-working, ill-paid clergy of England, many of whom are equally pious, and have besides won for themselves the highest University honors."

Something very different from a fellow who was originally bred (-sy) a carpenter, though he has subsequently been a Church Missionary for more than 35 years, is wanted, say Clericus, for a Missionary Bishop. What other thing would he have? A thing of unsullied hands, irreproachable white tie, correct black coat, vest, and pantaloons, unexceptionable lavender-kid gloves, dainty intonation, delicate features, Macassar-oiled curls and aristocratic connections? For that is something which has succeeded the primitive Missionaries—from whom it is certainly something very different.—Punch.

Extraordinary Premiums to Agents

For procuring Subscribers for

TICKETS AT ONE DOLLAR EACH,

IN PERHAM'S GREAT

100,000 GIFT ENTERPRISE!

The distribution of the Gifts being definitely fixed for JULY 5, 1855.

Any person sending $10 may deduct 10 per cent. or will receive 11 Tickets.

Each person sending $100 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Mammoth Gold Pen and Case, valued at $10.

Each person sending $200 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Silver Watch, valued at $25.

Each person sending $300 before the 5th of July, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Gold Watch, valued at $50.

The person who shall send, before the 5th of July, the largest amount above $500, will, in addition to commissions, be Presented with a Piano, valued at $200.

I have been induced to make the above liberal offers in order to remove a settled objection in the minds of your committee, to having the distribution take place while there remain in my hands tickets unsold, and for which cause they seem fit to defer the partition of the gifts, which was fixed for the 27th inst., to the 5th of July, as will be seen by reference to their proceedings, published below. I assure you that the postponement is as vexatious to me as it is to those who have purchased tickets. I therefore hope that each and every one now interested, will co-operate with me in the effort to dispose of the few thousand tickets remaining unsold, and thus advance the interests of the whole body of shareholders.

Respectfully yours,

J PERHAM

TO THE PATRONS OF

Perham's Third Gift Enterprise.

At a meeting of the Committee of Shareholders of Perham's Gift Enterprise, held at the Academy Hall, Broadway, on Wednesday Evening, April 18th, 1855, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted and ordered to be printed:—

Whereas, in view of the fact that several enterprises have been started and carried on with a seeming positive purpose of defrauding those who could be persuaded to purchase tickets therein; and such fraudulent proceedings have exerted an injurious influence in the sale of tickets in the enterprise of Mr. Perham; and whereas, it is deemed essential that all the tickets should be disposed of before the distribution takes place, be it therefore

Resolved, That in order to allow time for that purpose, the distribution be postponed until the 5th of July, at such place as may hereafter be determined on.

Resolved, That the committee have undiminished confidence in the integrity of Mr. Perham and in his disposition to conform to all his published promises to his patrons.

ROBT. BEATTY, Jr,
Chairman.

REMEMBER!

The Tickets are only $1 Each,

And each Ticket admits Four Persons to Perham's Burlesque Opera, 663 Broadway, New York.

☞ Orders will now be received for Tickets in Perham's Fourth Gift Enterprise.

PERHAM'S GIFT ENTERPRISE.

The committee appointed by the Shareholders in this affair, to distribute the 100,000 Gifts amongst the ticket holders, have deferred the distribution until the 5th of July, on account of there remaining unsold some few thousands of tickets. Mr. Perham, ever anxious to meet the views of his patrons, offers extraordinary inducements to Agents to engage in the sale of the remaining tickets, so that there may be no mere delays, which are unquestionably as vexatious to him as to those who have purchased tickets in his enterprise. We commend the reading of his advertisement to our patrons, and hope that each and all will lend a helping hand to bring the matter to an early and satisfactory consummation.

Exhibitions and Lectures.

THE Undersigned proposes exhibiting the

Diorama of Uncle Tom's Cabin,

in the principal Cities, Towns, and Villages in the Northern States and Canada: and to accompany them with abundant evidence as to the truthfulness of the facts assumed by the author, in the work known by that name, which will include the recital of some most mysterious and thrilling incidents in the history of his own family. The flight of his parents for freedom—their capture, and return to slavery and their second flight; a history of their lost boys, who were stolen and sold into slavery—the death of one of them, and the redemption of the other by the purchase of himself; and the final purchase for the enormous sum of five thousand dollars.

The paintings, comprising the scenes of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," are the production of an eminent French artist, and show as large as life, and represent the most prominent scenes and characters in the work.

In order to render our labors more effectual and create more general interest and benefit, we propose the following arrangements, viz:—To give one half of the receipts to any Church or Society, or regularly appointed committee by the puplic, who will provide a place, secure an audience, and defray the expenses incident to the meeting.

An arrangement by which every Church or Society in the country may replenish their funds, aid their pastors, or whatever other benevolent object that commends itself to public patronage.

Let such then who would help the cause, help themselves, and help us in our feeble endeavours to enlist the public ear to the cries of bleeding humanity; get at once to work, communicate immediately with us preparatory to an exhibition.

We shall not however confine ourselves to that deplorable and humiliating aspect of the colored man's case, repesented in that work.

But we promise at no distant day, a new programme of very different scenes, representing not only an entirely original, but a far more hopeful aspect of the black man, than has ever been presented to the American public.

It is neither egotism, nor yet flattery, in us to say that this mode of giving instruction possesses the double merit of engaging those two most important faculties that man possesses—the mind and the sight at the same time, and making an ineffacable impression. It is not as being necessarily dependent and degraded, then that, we shall confine our exhibitions of his character.

There have been places where, and times when the black man of modern times has proven himself the patriot, the statesman, and the warrior. As such, then, let him be known to the world, that it may acknowledge it, and to our youth, that they may imitate their example and copy their virtues.

We suffer more perhaps, from false representation, than all other ills put together.

Those amongst us who have acted the part of patriot are represented to be vicious and ungovernable: and those whom the most direful and crushing prejudices have debarred from the opportunities for higher development are represented as submissive willing underlings. Generation after generation are stamped with the same false impressions, and learn to assume it on the one hand, and regard it as a fixed inevitable fact on the other.

We are arranging a new and a very extensive programme of Distinguished Colored Men and the incidents with which they have been connected and acquitted themselves honorably—such as ATTICUS, "the first martyr of the Revolution," the "Colored Regiments at the Battle of New Orleans," and the distinguished and most prominent "black leaders" who freed the first spot discovered by Columbus, that was first desecrated to slavery—Hispanola—now Hayti.

I have endeavored to make the arrangements sufficiently liberal to meet the patronage and engage the attention of all who have an interest in our common cause.

For further important particulars, you will write me, (post paid,)

J. N. STILL,
Brooklyn, L. I

A MORE "IMPORTANT NOTICE!"

American Tract Society—Slavery.

THE Independent, of New York, in an article in that paper, of the 15th March, being one of a continuation of articles regarding the "American Tract Society," has this sentence:—"For thirty years, one of the greatest institutions of Evangelical Christendom, has been testifying in effect, that the institution of Slavery, the buying and selling of human beings, and the profession of the slave-trader, are less offensive to God, less contary to the Gospel, less perilous to the souls of men, than the practice of dancing. It has attempted to exhibit and authenticate, on the widest scale, an administration of Christianity, in which there shall be no more syllable of rebuke for crimes that shock the morals sense of Christendom. The influence of the Tract Society has tended to make the Southern churches more timid and cowed in the presence of the imperious slave-trading interest. As a consequence of this policy—partly, but not exclusively—behold the SOUTHERN APOSTACY!"

In December 1844, a report of "The" Committee of the Synod of New York and New Jersey, on the subject of the mutilations of books by the American Tract Society," was published; and in that report, the mutilations and omissions in the editions published, by that Society, of D'Aubigne's History of the Great Reformation, were pointed out—besides, there are the omissions and expurgations in other books published, as to the vile sin of Slavery, and the substitution of sentences other than the original.

The notice by me entitled, "Publications," referable to these matters, has been widely circulated, and a Canadian public are again reminded of their duty.

Trustees and Directors

Elected to serve during the present year:—

W. J. MACDONELL,—PRESIDENT,
P. J. O'NEILL,—VICE-PRESIDENT,
MESSRS S G. LYNN, P. FOY, & DR. HAYES.
BANKERS—BANK OF UPPER CANADA,
SOLICITOR—JAS. HALLINAN, ESQ.

This Institution is now opened for the transaction of business on every day—Sundays and Holidays excepted,—from 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 p. m., when sums from One Shilling upwards will be received on deposit, and Interest allowed according to its Rules and Regulations, which may be seen at any time by applying at the Bank.

The Toronto Savings Bank has been founded solely with a view towards, encouraging habits of economy amongst the operative classes, by offering them a place for the secure deposit of their savings, and the most liberal terms of interest for the money they pay in—to accomplish these ends, and to ensure public confidence in the Institution, the Rules provide—

1. That there shall always be a numerous directory.

2. That ample securities be given by the Officers, and that both Officers and Trustees be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties.

3 That the most public city shall be given to the manner in which its affairs shall be conducted, by submitting a statement at every Session of Parliament to each branch of the Legislature, and publishing the same in the city newspapers.

4 All the profits made by investments are to be paid to depositors, and the interest can never be less than FOUR per cent.

5 Interest is paid from the last day in each month in which the deposit is made, and continues until the day that the money be withdrawn, which may be done at any time.

6. The services of the Trustees and Directors are entirely gratuitous, and it is not permitted that they shall derive any advantage whatever from the funds—even as accommodation.

Office on Colborne Street, Corner of the Old Post Office Lane.

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 28th April, 1853

In virtue of the authority of the Third Section of an Act of the Provincial Parliament, passed the sixteenth year of her Majesty's reign, and chaptered eighty-five, it is ordered that Goods bona fide exported to this Province from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, and under Bonds, shall be, until it shall be otherwise ordered, valued for Duty as if such Goods were imported directly from such first-mentioned country into this Province.

By command, R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, C. C.

(CIRCULAR.)

I. G. O.—CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.
Quebec, 29th April, 1853.

Sir,—I am directed by the Inspector General to instruct you to allow the importers of goods in every case to deduct either the discount actually allowed for cash, or that which according to the custom of trade is allowed for cash, thus, putting all importers on the same footing and charging all the duty on the market cash value. I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedt. servant,

R. S. M. BOUCHETTE.

The Collector of Customs.

Certificates.

Without professing myself a believer in all varied departments of Phrenology, a Science to which I have given little or no attention, I yet have pleasure in acknowledging that, myself and family having submitted to an examination at the request of Mr. Persons, he gave us, and that with great readiness, as far as I can judge, a very truthful description of our characters. Conscious defects were pointed out. Those faculties which needed cultivation, and those that had been improved and developed by particular pursuits of studies were named, in cases where he could not have known what these were.

As Mr. P. professes his belief in the atonement of Christ as the only ground of acceptance with God, and in the necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul and to enable us to improve what is defective in us, and in the hope that it may be his object to become practically acquainted with these truths himself, and to cause their influence to be felt in his teachings, I trust that he will meet with success in his classes.

JOHN ALEXANDER.

Brantford, December 26, 1854.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21st 1853.

This is to certify that the Bearer, Wm. Persons, is deeply imbued with the spirit and doctrines of Phrenology, has attended my lectures, and read my works; that he has a first rate natural talent for prosecuting this science, that I strongly recommend him, while examining his head, and before I knew him, to follow this science as a permanent profession; that I recommend him to the public as talented and worthy of patronage, and think him calculated to do good.

THE Universal Phonographer,

ORGAN OF THE
American Writing and Printing Reform Association.

Edited and Published by Andrew J. Graham,
Editor of the Phonetic Department of Life Illustrated.

THIS Journal—the oldest American Phonographic publication—enters in January, 1855, upon its fourth volume. Its publisher is determined that this volume shall add to its former unequaled popularity, circulation, and usefulness. In addition to sixteen large pages of Phonography, printed from ENGRAVED stone, it will contain sixteen pages of corresponding size printed in Phonotypy, Longhand, Phonography, and Common Type. Thus its patrons will be furnished each month with a Journal of THIRTY-TWO pages, beautifully printed, containing Essays, Criticisms, Book Reviews, Hints as to Phonographic Outlines, Vocalization, and Phrase-Writing, Remarks on Pronunciation and Orthography, Phonetic Intelligence, Notices to Correspondents, Important Items of News, Biographies of Phonographers, "Gems of Expression," "Glances," Sketches, Eloquent Extracts, etc., etc., in four different methods of representing our language; Romantic Print, Phonetic Print, Phonetic Long-hand, and Phonetic Short-hand (in both of its styles). And all for ONE DOLLAR. Subscriptions should be prepaid and addressed thus: "ANDREW J. GRAHAM, Phonetic Depot, 358, Bleecker Street, New York."

☞ Any person desiring to become practically acquainted with the different departments of the Writing and Printing Reform, cannot better attain his or her wish than by sending the publisher $1 50 (the fifty cents in stamps), for which there will be furnished the necessary instruction book (pre-paid), and the Universal Phonographer for one year.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
CANADA FARMER,

A New and Splendidly Illustrated Monthly Journal,

DEVOTED TO AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE.

IN presenting to the public a PROSPECTUS of the CANADA FARMER, the Publisher can only promise his best efforts to render the work alike useful to the great Farming Interest and satisfactory to its Readers. The undersigned has been some time connected with the GENESEE FARMER, and he is authorized to say that all the EXPERIENCE AND TALENT employed on that Old and Respectable Journal, will also contribute to the Pages of the CANADA FARMER, in addition to the assistance of some of the best Agricultural writers in the provinces

By a happy combination of events, the Canadas are now brought into closer relation with the States; and whatever promotes the prosperity and welfare of the one, equally benefits the other.

The CANADA FARMER will be of the same size and general appearance as the Genesee Farmer; and in amount of reading matter and variety of Illustrations, for the price, will surpass any similar Journal in the world.

The undersigned will be supplied with all the leading Horticultural and Agricultural Publications of this and foreign countries; and the readers of the Canada Farmer may look confidently to its pages for all improvements in Horticulture, Farming, Stock-Breeding, &c. Each number will contain 32 Royal Octavo Pages, in double columns.

CONSTITUTION
OF THE
Provincial Union.

ARTICLE I.

We, the undersigned, associate for the purpose of carrying out the following Pledge:—

By carrying into progression of measures to further promote Liberty, Genuine Christianity, Active Benevolence, the Principles of Love, Freedom, and a Brotherly Union, not based on complexional considerations, and in the imperative duty now resting upon us to thwart the plans now maturing to array one class of Her Majesty's subjects against another, and increasing class on the ground is of the complexional characters, as a portion of the latter, we pledge ourselves to use all the power in our associated capacity, as members of this Union and in our private capacities as citizens,—1st To promote a healthy harmony and to diffuse a loyal spirit among those of Her Majesty's subjects with whom we may associate or come in contact. 2nd To encourage and support such Press or those Presses, in Canada as would uphold the well-deserved character of the citizens of this country against the unjust imputations, reflections and designs of many in the United States and elsewhere, who would carve out a policy for emigrants, formerly bond, and free, different from white emigrants who may and do settle here, by counselling the former to be in a "good peculiarity" for the latter, as their highest ambition, and to degrade themselves into exclusive communities or colonies in the West Indies as the home for the mass, in preference to the free soil of Canada; thereby promulgating the unproved doctrine that God's children of different complexions, existed originally in the British Isles or British America, or those of darker hue, become inferior species, were land-workers of water to those of a lighter complexion, and to call in our power to remove them and Slavery from the face of the earth, and form an Association of Great Britain, to check its progress in America by legislative means; and 3rd, To encourage the rising generation in Literary, scientific, and moral efforts. 4th As a means of operations, to support the "Provincial Freeman," as our organ, so long as it may be found to advocate sound principles, and to use our ability to promote objects in connexion with it, to further honest endeavours in this direction.

ART. II.—For the better Success of the above measures, the Parent Society shall consist of a President, a Vice President, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries Treasurer, and a Committee as extensive as the number of signatures to the Pledge.

ART III.—The annual fee of each male member shall be 2s 6d curr'y.

ART IV.—The Female Members shall organize a Committee with a Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer; and the annual contribution for each member, shall be 1s 3d.

ART V.—The object of the Ladies' Committee shall be to prepare articles for an Annual Fair, to be held in Toronto, Hamilton, London, Chatham, and other large cities and towns, at which auxiliaries may be formed; also, to devise other measures for promoting the specific object; namely, the support of the people's organ, the Provincial Freeman.

ART. VI.—Auxiliary Societies may be formed in each town, city, or village, in which parties may be found to take as their basis the Constitution of this Society, provided that they, at their option, make such local arrangements as the peculiarities of the case require.

ART. VII.—The officers of the Society shall be elected annually, and at each annual meeting, one or more persons shall be empowered to assist in forming auxiliaries, and in whatever way the interests of the Society may demand.

ART. VIII.—The Ladies' Committee shall meet every Monday evening, for the purpose of making up articles, useful and elegant; and to them shall be entrusted the details of their plans.

ART. IX.—A monthly meeting of members, both male and female shall be assembled for the purpose of promoting the literary objects specified, by recitations of original pieces, reading, debates, &c. Twice in the year, at the semi-annual and annual meetings, parties shall be solicited to address the Society.

ART. X.—This Constitution can be altered at the Annual Meeting, by a vote of a majority of members present and the addition of the votes from each auxiliary society, through delegates from the same, provided, that at whatever place the Annual Fair may be held, the Annual Meeting shall be held for the time being

PROSPECTUS FOR 1855.

THE
SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ESTABLISHED AUGUST 4TH, 1821.
Weekly Edition between 80,000 and 90,000.

THE long period of over Thirty-three Years, during which the Saturday Evening Post has been established, and its present immense circulation, are guarantees to all who may subscribe to it, that they will receive a full return for their money. Our arrangements, so far, for the coming year, are such as we trust will be thought worthy of the high reputation of the Post. Positive arrangements already have been made for contributions from the gifted pens of

MRS. SOUTHWORTH, GRACE GREENWOOD, MRS. DENISON, MARY IRVING, E. L. SPROAT, MRS. CARLEN, FANNY FERN, and a NEW CONTRIBUTOR, (whose name by request is withheld).

In the first paper of January next, we design commencing the following novelet:—

Six Weeks of Courtship.

By Mrs. Emilie F. Carlen, author of "One Year of Wedlock," &c., &c.

We purpose following this with an original novelet—designed to illustrate, incidentally, the great Evils of Intemperance, entitled—

The Falls of the Wyalusing.

By a new and distinguished Contributor.

We also have made arrangements for two stories, to be entitled:—

The Oneida Sisters,
AND
The Nabob's Will.

By Grace Greenwood, author of "Greenwood Leaves," "Haps and Mishaps," &c.

Also the following additional contributions:—

New Series of Sketches.

By Fanny Fern, author of "Fern Leaves," &c.

Mark, the Sexton.

A novelet, by Mrs. Denison, author of "The Step-Mother," "Home Pictures," &c.

NANCY SELWYN,
OR,
The Cloud with a Silver Lining.

A novelet, by Mary Irving.

And last, but by no means least,—from the fascinating and powerful pen of the Post's own exclusive Contributor:—

VIVIA,
A Story of Life's Mystery.

By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, author of "Miriam," "The Lost Heiress," &c., &c.

In addition to the above proud array of contributions, we shall endeavour to keep up our usual variety of Original Sketches and Letters, Pictures of Life in our own and foreign lands, Choice Selections from all sources, Agricultural Articles, General News, Humourous Anecdotes, View of the Produce and Stock Markets, Bank Note List, Editorials, &c., &c.

Our object being to give a complete Record, as far as our limits will admit, of the Great World.

Engravings.—In the way of Engravings, we generally present at least two weekly—one of an instructive, and the other of a humorous character.

The Postage on the Post to any part of the United States, paid quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where it is received, is only 26 cents a year

Terms.—The Terms of the Post are Two Dollars, if paid in advance, Three Dollars, if not paid in advance. For Five Dollars, in advance, one copy is sent three years. We continue the following low terms for Clubs, to be sent, in the city, to one address, and, in the country, to one Post Office.

4 Copies,	- - - - per annum	$ 5
8 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$10
13 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$15
20 do	(and 1 to the getter up of the Club)	$20

The money for Clubs always must be sent in advance. Subscriptions may be sent at our risk. When the sum is large, a draft should be procured, if possible—the cost of which may be deducted from the amount. Address, always post-paid,

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 66, South Third Street, Philadelphia.

☞ N.B.—Any Person desirous of receiving a copy of the POST, as a sample, can be accommodated by notifying the Publishers by letter, (post-paid).

☞ To EDITORS.—Editors who give the above one insertion, or condense the material portions of it, (the notices of new contributions and our terms,) for their editorial columns, shall be entitled to an exchange, by sending us a marked copy of the paper containing the advertisement or notice

☞ Complimentary notices omitted for want of room.

PROSPECTUS.

LIFE ILLUSTRATED,

A NEW FIRST CLASS
Family Newspaper.

Devoted to News, Literature, Science, and the Arts; to Entertainment, Improvement and Progress.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY, AT $2 A YEAR.
BY FOWLERS & WELLS,
308, Broadway, New York.

It is our purpose to furnish a journal, which, bound to no party, sect, or theory, embracing every human interest, and furnishing food for all the faculties of the mind, shall merit a world-wide circulation.

LITERATURE,

in the form of Original Essays, Historical, Biographical, and Descriptive Sketches of Travel and Adventure. Poetry, Painting, Music, and Sculpture, etc., from the pens of our best writers, with choice selections from the leading periodicals of Europe, will form a prominent feature. The great field of

SCIENCE,

in all its departments, will be explored, and all new discoveries laid before our readers in a popular form. THE ARTS, particularly in the departments of Agriculture, Mechanical Industry, and Manufactures, will receive attention, and no invention or improved process will escape our notice.

AGRICULTURE & HORTICULTURE,

in which so large a portion of our people are engaged, will demand at our hands special consideration. We shall endeavor to elevate still more the standard of MECHANICAL INDUSTRY, and to develop and bring to light the latent talent and skill of our intelligent and worthy artisans.

PHYSIOLOGY

and the Laws of Life, in their application to physical development and the promotion of health will have a prominent place in our columns.

EDUCATION,

in its broadest sense will be encouraged, and, aided by contributors, engaged in teaching in college, school, and shop, we shall try to render the pursuit of knowledge easy and attractive.

NEW BOOKS

will be carefully and candidly noticed, and where their importance seems to demand it, critically reviewed. In the department of

GENERAL NEWS,

we shall be prompt, authentic, and full, giving a carefully prepared summary of passing events, both foreign and domestic, and recording all signs of progress in every department of life. THE MARKETS will be carefully reported, and such general, commercial, and financial information given as the interests of our readers demand.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

We shall make our paper a welcome and valued visitor at every fireside. THE CHILDREN will find, in each number, a snug corner set apart for their amusement and instruction.

Kind reader, an outline of our plan is before you. Do you like it? If so, we shall be happy to receive your subscription and influence in behalf of Humanity, and our new enterprise.

Poetry.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Flowers in the Market Place.

BY BELLE BUSH.

I've seen on the hill side, and down in the vale
A meek little blossom, with cheeks lily pale;
I've seen in the woodland, the loveliest flowers
Look up through the sunlight, and laugh in the showers.
I've been where the Primrose unclosed to the air
Its dew-dripping chalice, and nectar bid there;
But joy never flowed in such rills to my heart
As came with your smiles, in the crowd of the Mart,
Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
Laugh of the sunbeams, and pearls of the showers,
I love you, I love you, oh, beautiful flowers.

I've watched where the rose-heart hath whispered its love,
And plighted its vows, in the ear of the dove;
I've strayed where the fox-glove hung over the rills,
Where the eye of the daisy shone out on the hills,
I've culled the blue hare-bells, and swung on the vines,
And seen the soft banks where the wood myrtle twines;
But these never thrilled the deep chords of my heart
Like the light of your smiles in the din of the Mart,
Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
Footprints of angels, God's light in the bowers,
I love you, I love you, oh, beautiful flowers!

I've been where the Columbine lifted its head,
And the Wintergreen blushed, with its berries of red,
I've wandered along like a waif on the sea,
Where my music for hours was the hum of the bee,
I've danced in the halls of the tangled wild-wood,
And heard the loud roar of the cataract's flood,
But peace never nestled so close to my heart,
Till I bent o'er the flowers in the crowd of the Mart,
Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
No oak's gnarled branches, no ivy-hung towers,
Would have blest me like you, oh, ye beautiful flowers!

My spirit was drooping, earth-weary and worn,
As I passed from my room in the early spring morn!
I yearned for the hill-tops, I pined for the vales,
Where I knew the sweet flowers wooed the soft winged gales;
But a crowd was around me the tramp of a throng
Hushed the tremulous notes of the spirit of song.
Yet all their wild numbers flowed back to my heart
When I saw the bright flowers in the crowd of the Mart,
Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
How holy and pure are the mystical powers
Which live in your presence, oh, beautiful flowers!

I've seen gay wreaths over dark rocks flung,
And the moss-fringed nest where the Oriole swung.
I've seen the blue curtained violet peep
Like a timid child from the hedgerow deep,
I've seen where the small star flower looked up
With its "silvery eye" to the lily's cup,
But I knew not how precious they were to my heart,
Till I looked on their forms mid the din of the Mart.
Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
I've seen fair forms in the festive bowers,
Ye are brighter than they, oh, ye beautiful flowers!

The hunter who follows the mountain stag
Or the fleet chamois o'er the shelving crag,
In the triumph and strength of the fearful hour,
Thanks God for the smile of the Alpine flower—
And thus would I murmur a hymn of praise
For the blossoms that lighten our dreary ways,
And bless from the depth of my joyous heart,
Those lights of the desert, the flowers of the Mart.
Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
Black plumes may fall from the coming hours,
But I'll thank of you ever, oh, beautiful flowers!
Philadelphia.

Miscellaneous.

AN UNEXPECTED RACE.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JUN'R.

In one of the large towns of Worcester County, Massachusetts, used to live a clergyman, whom we will call Ridewell. He was of the Baptist persuasion, and very rigid in his ideas of moral propriety. He had in his employ an old negro, named Pompey, and if this latter individual was not so strict in his morals as his master, he was at least a very cunning dog, and passed in the reverend household for a pattern of propriety. Pomp. was a useful servant, and the old clergyman never hesitated to trust him with the most important business.

Now it so happened that there were, dwelling in and about the town, sundry individuals who had not the fear of the dreadful penalties which Mr. Ridewell preached about before their eyes, for it was the wont of these people to congregate upon Sabbath evenings upon a level piece of land in the outskirts of the town, and there race horses. This spot was hidden from view by a dense piece of woods, and for a long while the Sunday evening races were carried on there without detection by the officers, or others who might have stopped them.

It also happened that the good old clergyman owned one of the best horses in the country. This horse was of the old Morgan stock, with a mixture of the Arabian blood in his veins, and it was generally known that few beasts could pass him on the road. Mr. Ridewell, with a dignity becoming his calling, stoutly declared that the fleetness of his horse never afforded him any gratification, and that, for his own part, he would as lief have any other. Yet money could not buy his Morgan, nor could any amount of argument persuade him to swap.

The church was so near to the good clergyman's dwelling that he always walked to meeting, and his horse was consequently allowed to remain in the pasture.

Pompey discovered that these races were on the tapis, and he resolved to enter his master's horse on his own account, for he felt sure that old Morgan could beat anything in the shape of horseflesh that could be produced in that quarter.

So on the very next Sunday evening, he hid the bridle under his jacket went out into the pasture and caught the horse, and then off to the spot where the wicked ones had congregated. Here he found some dozen horses assembled, and the races were about to commence. Pomp. mounted his beast, and at the signal, old Morgan entered into the spirit of the thing, and came out two rods ahead of everything. So Pomp. won quite a pile, and before dark he was well initiated in horse-racing.

Pomp. succeeded in getting home without exciting any suspicions, and he now longed for the Sabbath afternoon to come, for he was determined to try it again. He did so again, and again he won; and this course of wickedness he followed up for two months, making his appearance upon the racing ground every Sunday afternoon, as soon as he could after "meeting was out." And during this time Pompey was not the only one who had learned to love the racing. No, for old Morgan himself had come to love the excitement of the thing, too, and his every motion when upon the track showed how zealously he entered into the spirit of the game.

But these things were not always to remain a secret. One Sunday a pious deacon beheld this racing from a distance, and straightway went to the parson with the alarming intelligence. The Rev. Mr. Ridewell was utterly shocked. His moral feelings were outraged, and he resolved at once to put a stop to the wickedness. During the week he made many enquiries, and he learned that this thing had been practised all summer on every Sabbath afternoon. He bade his parishioners keep quiet, and he told them that on the next Sunday he would make his appearance on the very spot and catch them in their deeds of iniquity.

On the following Sabbath, after dinner, Mr. Ridewell ordered Pomp. to bring up old Morgan and put him in the stable. The order was obeyed, though not without many misgivings on the part of the faithful negro. As soon as the afternoon services were closed, the two deacons and some others of the members of the church accompanied the minister home, with their horses.

"It is the most flagrant piece of abomination that ever came to my knowledge," said the indignant clergyman as they rode on.

"It is, most assuredly," answered one of the deacons.

"Horse-racing on the Sabbath?" uttered the minister.

"Dreadful!" echoed the second deacon.

And so the conversation went on until they reached the top of a gentle eminence which overlooked the plain where the racing was carried on, and where some dozen horsemen, with a score of lookers-on, were assembled. The sight was one which chilled the good parson to his soul. He remained motionless until he had made out the whole alarming truth, then turning to his companions:

"Now, brothers," said he, "let us ride down and confront the wicked wretches, and if they will go down upon their knees and implore God's mercy, and promise to do so no more, we will not take legal action against them. O, that my own land should be desecrated thus!" for it was indeed a section of his own farm.

As the good clergyman thus spoke, he started on towards the scene. The horses of the wicked men were just drawing up for a start as the minister approached, and some of the riders who at once recognized "old Morgan," did not recognize the reverend individual who rode him.

"Wicked men!" commenced the parson, as he came near enough for his voice to be heard, "children of sin and shame—"

"Come on, old hoss," cried one of the jockeys, turning towards the minister. "If you are in for the first race, you must stir your stumps. Now we go."

"Alas, O, my wicked—"

"All ready!" shouted he who led the affair, cutting the minister short. "And off it is!"

And the word for starting was given. Old Morgan knew that word too well, for no sooner did it fall upon his ears than he stuck out his nose, and with one wild snort he started, and the rest of the racers, twelve in number, kept him company.

"Who-oa, Who-oa," cried the parson at the top of his voice.

"By the powers old fellow, you're a keen one!" shouted one of the wicked men, who had thus far managed to keep close by the side of the parson. "You ride well."

"Aho-ho-ho-o-o! who-a-oa," yelled the clergyman, tugging at the reins with all his might.

But it was all of no avail. Old Morgan had now reached ahead of all competitors, and he came up to the judge's stand three rods ahead, where the petrified deacons were standing with eyes and mouths wide open.

"Don't stop," cried the judge who had now recognised Parson Ridewell, and suspected his business, and who also saw at once into the secret of Old Morgan joining the race.

"Don't stop," he shouted again, "it is a two mile heat this time. Keep right on parson. You are good for another mile. Now you go—and off it is."

These last words were of course known to the horse, and no sooner did Morgan hear them, than he struck out again; and again started off. The poor parson did his utmost to stop the bewitched animal, but it could not be done. The more he struggled and pelled, the faster the animal went, and ere many moments he was again at the starting-point where Morgan now stopped of his own accord. There was a hurried whispering among the wicked ones, and a succession of very curious winks and knowing nods seemed to indicate that they understood.

"Upon my soul parson," said the leader of the abomination, approaching the spot where the minister still sat in the saddle, he having not yet recovered his presence of mind to dismount, "you ride well. We had not looked for this honor."

"Honor sir," gasped Ridewell, looking blankly in the speaker's face.

"Aye—for 'tis an honor. You are the first clergymen who has ever joined us in our Sabbath entertainments."

"I—I sir! I joined you?"

"Ha, ha, ha, ha! O, you did it well.—Your deacons really think you tried to stop your horse; but I saw through it; I saw how slily you put your horse up. But I dont blame you feeling proud of Old Morgan, for I should feel so myself if I owned him. But you need not fear; I will tell who may ask about it, that you did your best to stop your beast, for I would rather stretch the truth a little, than have such a good jockey as you are suffer."

This had been spoken so loudly that the deacons had heard every word, and the poor parson was bewildered; but he soon came to himself, and with a flashing eye, he cried:

"Villains, what mean you? Why do ye thus—"

"Hold on," interrupted one of the party, and as he spoke the rest of the racing men had all mounted their horses, "hold on a moment parson. We are willing to allow you to carry off the palm, but we wont stand your abuse. When we heard that you had determined to try if your horse would not beat us all, we agreed among ourselves that if you came, we would let you in. We have done so, and you have won the race in a two mile heat. Now let that satisfy you. By the hokey, but you done it well. When you want to try it again, just send us word, and we'll be ready for you. Good by."

As the wretch thus spoke he turned his horse's head, and before the astonished preacher could utter a word, the whole party had ridden away out of hearing. It was some time before the churchmen could speak, They knew not what to say. Why should their minister's horse have joined in the race without some permission from its master. They knew how much he set by the animal, and at length they shook their heads with doubt.

"It is very strange," said one.

"Very," answered a second.

"Remarkable," suggested a third.

"On my soul, brethren," spoke Ridewell, "I can't make it out."

The brethren looked at each other, and the deacons shook their heads in a very solemn and impressive manner.

So, the party rode back to the clergyman's house, but none of the brethren would enter, nor would they stop at all. Before Monday had drawn to a close, it was generally known that Parson Ridewell raced his horse on the Sabbath, and a meeting of the church was appointed for Thursday.

Poor Ridewell was almost crazy with vexation; but before Thursday came, Pompey found out how matters stood, and he assured his master he could clear the matter up; and after a day's search he discovered the astounding fact that some of those wicked men had been in the habit of stealing old Morgan from the pasture, and racing him on Sabbath afternoons. Pomp found out this much—but he could not find who did it.

As soon as this became known to the church they conferred together, and they soon concluded that under such circumstances a high mettled horse would be very apt to run away with his rider when he found himself directly upon the track.

So Parson Ridewell was cleared, but it was a long while before he got over the blow, for many were the wicked wags who delighted to pester him by offering to "ride a race" with him, to "bet on his head," or to "put him against the world on a race." But Ridewell grew bolder, his heart grew warmer, and finally he could laugh with right good will when he spoke of his unexpected race. Be sure there was no more Sabbath racing in that town.

Remarkable Persons.

Extraordinary Longevity.—"Uncle Jack"—and who is there that has lived in this vicinity within the last forty years who did not know "Uncle Jack?"—is dead. He breathed his last on Tuesday, at his residence in the town of Willing,' a few miles south of this village. He was 120 years old. As our readers at a distance may not be familiar with the history of this extraordinary man, we will inform them. He was an African—a pure African. When a child, he was stolen from his native plains in Africa, by a band of marauding Arabs, who retained him until he arrived at manhood, when he was sold to a West India man-dealer. He was carried to the Island of St. Domingo, where he served a number of years with different masters, as a slave cook. At the time of the insurrection in St. Domingo, (which event, if we mistake not, transpired in or about the year 1798,) when the furious blacks exterminated almost the entire white population of the Island.. Uncle Jack refused to join with his fellow-boudmen in the insurrection—choosing rather to flee to New York with his master, whom he represented as being very kind to him. As Slavery was one of the "institutions," at that time of the State, he was still a slave, and remained with his old St. Domingo master until his death, when he was sold. His last master was the late Judge Lindsey of Lawrenceville, Pa.—hence the name of Jack Lindsey. Jack became a freeman under the laws of Pennsylvania, after devoting the number of years allotted to the life of man to the routine of a slave's life. His wife, who survives him, he purchased while yet a slave, paying for her the sum of one hundred dollars. The twain came to Alleghany county about 30 years ago, and have resided here ever since. For a number of years past they have lived upon the charity of the people hereabout, and have also been recipients of aid from Anti-Slavery Societies of the County. Physically speaking, Uncle Jack Lindsey had been a model man—tall, well-porportioned, and as straight as our native pines—but the toils and troubles of nearly a century and a quarter had bent low his erect and stalwart form, bleaching the raven hue of his "fleecy locks" to snowy white, and closed the windows of his soul against the sunlight of earth. He, however, retained his mental faculties in a remarkable degree. He was rigidly pious. His piety was of the Uncle Tom stamp—meek, lowly, patient, forgiving, and humbly submissive to the decrees of Providence. After eventful struggles with the vicissitudes of a bondman's life for nearly a century and a quarter,

"The poor old slave has gone to rest."

The Great Emancipator has set him free, and his soul has flown to that land where Slavery's blight despoileth not God's images. —Wellsville Press.

Hints for Marriageable Ladies.

If a man wipe his feet on the door-mat before coming into the room, you may be sure he will make a good domestic husband. If a man, in snuffing the candles, snuff them out, you may be sure he will make a stupid husband. If a man put his handkerchief on his knees while taking his tea, you may be sure he will be a prudent husband. In the same way, always mistrust the man who will not take the last piece of toast or Sally Lunn, but prefers waiting for the next warm batch. It is not unlikely he will make a greedy, selfish husband, with whom you will enjoy no "brown" at dinner, no crust at tea, no peace whatever at home. The man, my dears, who wears goloe-shoes, and is careful about wrapping himself up well before venturing into the night air, not unfrequently makes a good invalid husband, that mostly stops at home, and is easily comforted with slops. The man who watches the kettle and prevents its boiling over, will not fail, my dears, in his married state, in exercising the same care in always keeping the pot boiling. The man who doesn't take tea, ill-treats the cat, takes snuff, and stands with his back to the fire, is a brute whom I would not advise you, my dears, to marry upon any consideration, either for love or money, but decidedly not for love; but the man who, when the tea is over, is discovered to have had none, is sure to make the best husband. Patience like his deserves being rewarded with the best of wives and the best of mothers-in-law. My dears, when you meet with such a man, do your utmost to marry him. In the severest winter he would not mind going to bed first.—London Punch.

Chinese View of Europeans.

The Chinese of the interior whom business takes to Canton or Macao, always go the first thing, to look at the Europeans on the promenade. It is one of the most amusing of sights for them. They squat in rows along the sides of the quays, smoking their pipes, and fanning themselves, contemplating the while with a satirical and contemptuous eye, the English and Americans, who promenade up and down, from one end to the other, keeping time with admirable precision. Europeans who go to China, are apt to consider the inhabitants of the celestial city very odd, and supremely ridiculous, and the Provincial Chinese at Canton and Macao, pay back the sentiment with interest. It is very amusing, to hear their sarcastic remarks, on the appearance of the devils of the West, their utter astonishment at sight of their tight-fitting garments, their wonderful trousers, and prodigious round hats like chimney-pots—their shirt collars adapted to cut off the ears, and making a frame around such grotesque faces, with long noses and blue eyes, no beard or moustache, but a handful of curly hair on each cheek. The shape of the dress coat puzzles them above everything. They try in vain to account for it, calling it a half garment, because it is impossible to make it meet over the breast, and because there is nothing in front to correspond to the tails behind. They admire the judgment and exquisite taste of putting buttons as big as sapecks behind the back, where they never have anything to button. How much handsomer they think themselves with their narrow, oblique, black eyes, high cheek bones and little round noses, their shaven crowns, and magnificent pigtails hanging almost to their heels. Add to all these natural graces a conical hat, covered with red fringe, an ample tunic with large sleeves, and black satin boots, with a white sole of immense thickness, and it must be evident to all that a European cannot compare in appearence with a Chinese.—Huc's Chinese Empire.

A Capacious Carpet Bag.

Meanness occasionally meets with a shock that is a lesson to all concerned, especially to the victim. On the Cleveland cars, a day or two since, coming to Buffalo, was a stalwart man, going to New York to buy goods. He was not what might be called a stingy or close man, but he was one who, when there was a cent due him that swindling might deprive him of, would sacrifice a $50 bill to save the copper. Our friend had started from Cleveland without any breakfast; and when Erie "hove" in sight, he gathered himself up for a general skirmish for any and all kinds of provisions. He had a carpet bag with him, and going into the dining-room at Erie, deposited his bag on one chair, while he took another by its side. He was lost for about ten minutes—perfectly oblivious to anything, save that he had a blessed conciousness of something rapidly and agreeably filling up his "inwards." About this time, the landlord came round, and, stopping by our friend's chair, ejaculated, "Dollar, Sir." "A dollar," responded the eating-man—"a dollar—thought you only charged fifty cents a meal for one—eh?" "That's true," said meanness, "but I count your carpet-bag one, since it occupies a seat." (The table was far from being crowded.) Our friend expostulated, but the landlord insisted, and the dollar was reluctantly brought forth. The landlord passed on. Our friend deliberately arose, and opening his carpet-bag, full to its wide mouth, discoursed unto it, saying: "Carpet-bag, it seems you're an individual—a human individual, since you eat—at least I've paid for you, and now you must eat"—upon which he seized everything eatable within his reach, nuts, raisins, apples, cakes, and pies, and, amid the roars of the bystanders, the delight of his brother passengers, and the discomfiture of the landlord, phlegmatically went and took his seat in the cars. He said he had provisions enough to last him to New York, after a bountiful supply had been served out in the cars. There was at least $8 worth in the bag—upon which the landlord realised nothing in the way of profit. So much for meanness.—Buffalo Republican.

Why the Wedding-Ring is Placed on the Fourth Finger.—We have remarked on the vulgar error of a vein going from the fourth finger of the left hand to the heart. It is said by Swinburn and others, that therefore it became the wedding-finger. The priesthood kept up this idea by still keeping it as the wedding-finger, but it was got at through the use of the Trinity; for in the ancient ritual of English marriages, the ring was placed by the husband on the top of the thumb of the left hand, with the words "In the name of the Father," he then removed it to the forefinger, saying, "In the name of the Son," then to the middle finger, adding, "And of the Holy Ghost," finally he left it, as now, on the fourth finger, with the closing word "Amen."

Pretty Good for Pat.—The other day the conducter of a train on our railroad discovered an Irishman in a car soon after starting from Rome, and demanded his fare. Pat declared he had no money. The conducter, after lecturing him, told him to leave at the first stopping place, not far distant. Accordingly, Pat was one of the first to get off at the next station. But judge of the conductor's surprise and wrath to find him aboard when fairly on the way. "Did I not tell you to get off?" "And sure I did." "Why then, are you here again?" "And sure did you not say 'all aboard?'" This was too much for the worthy conductor, and notwithstanding the decree against "dead heads," he was allowed to pass.—Watertown Sentinel.

Rather Mean.—A shrewd chap presented himself, carpet-bag in hand, at the office of a hotel in New York, engaged a room for the night, and paid his fare in advance. His carpet-bag proved to be filled with stones and old paper, which he emptied upon the floor, filled the bag with bed clothes and took his departure. "Every day brings something new" in the way of roguery.

Attempted Assassination of Louis Napoleon.

The attempt made on the life of the Emperor last evening is, as may easily be supposed, the most interesting topic of the day, and for a while the seige of Sebastopol and the Conference at Vienna are lost sight of in the horror excited by such an act of villany, the contemplation of the consequences to Europe had it taken effect, and the general satisfaction at its failure. The statement of the principal facts, as published in the Moniteur of this morning, you will have received, I trust, long before the hour at which I write; the particulars which are not noticed in that paper, but which I have reason to believe authentic, I now communicate.

The Emperor, accompanied by two of his household, Colonel Ney and Colonel Valabreque, in plain clothes, left the Palace of the Tuileries about five o'clock to take his usual ride in the Champs Elysees, and join the Empress, who had preceded him, and was at that moment in the alley Dauphine, in the Bois de Boulogne. His Majesty on these occasions is never accompanied by an escort, and was only followed by two grooms at some distance. The weather was fine, and the grand avenue of the Champs Elysees, through which he passed at his ordinary slow pace, as well as the side alleys, was thronged with people, who showed the usual courtesy, and saluted him respectfully. As he approached the Barriere l'Etoile, and when nearly opposite the well-known place of amusement, the Chateau des Fleurs, a man apparently about 36 years old, of dark complexion, and a little under the middle size, advanced forward from the throng that crowded the pathway on the right, and approached to within five or six paces of the Emperor. He put one hand to his hat as if to salute his majesty, who was in the act of replying to the compliment, when he drew a pistol from underneath his grey paletot, deliberately presented it at the Emperor, and fired. At the same moment Colonel Ney, who was on the Emperor's right hand, but riding a very little to the rear, advanced his horse, when the assassin, supporting his pistol on his arm, fired a second shot At the first report the Emperor's horse shied a little, but it was probably that movement which saved the rider, together with the tremulous motion of the assassin's arm, occasioned by the failure of his first attempt. Neither shot took effect.

The second ball is said to have grazed the Emperor's hat, or even passed through it, but this is not known with any certainty. The shots were very sharp, and the report loud enough to be heard on the third floor of the houses on the side of the avenue. The assassin was at once seized by two masons, who were working at a house hard by, and who had left the building to have a sight of the Emperor as he passed. He was thrown by them on the ground. A police agent, named Alexander, a native of Corsica, whose duty it is to follow the Emperor, when riding or driving without escort, leaped out of the small carriage he occupied, ran to the spot where the assassin was struggling with his captors, and prevented him from drawing another pistol. The police agent took hold of him, and, as the other made the most violent attempts to shoot those who detained him, inflicted on him, in self-defence, two wounds with a poinard cane. The sergent-de-ville, aiding the police agent, succeeded in mastering and disarming him, but it required all their efforts to prevent him from being torn to pieces by the people. He was hurriedly taken off to the Octroi station at the barrier, which was not far distant, and there sheltered from the popular rage until a carriage could be brought, in which he was conveyed, under the guidance of the police, to the Conciergerie.

After the first shot was fired, the Emperor bent his head a little, either by an involuntary movement to avoid the bullet, or owing to the horse shying. When he saw the assassin in the hands of the people, and his clothes torn, he called out to spare him, and I am assured his words were, "Epargnez le—ne le tuez pas, le miserable!" The Emperor did not lose his presence of mind for an instant. He gratefully and gracefully replied by frequently taking off his hat and bowing to the thousand acclamations with which he was at once saluted as he still slowly advanced towards the triumphal arch. A messenger had been sent on at a gallop to inform the Empress, who was at the Porte Dauphine (Bois de Boulogne) of what had occurred, and to re-assure her as to the safety of her husband. In less than half an hour, the Empress returned from her drive in an open carriage, with the Emperor riding close by. The sight was touching in the extreme. Her Majesty was deeply affected; her tears flowed in spite of her; she in vain essayed to dry them, and she sobbed convulsively amid her efforts to smile with joy at her husband's escape from the murderer. Evidently she could not subdue her emotion; she leant back in her carriage, and relieved her heart in an uncontrolled burst of tears. Then, indeed, it was that the people who thronged the way gave full vent to the more generous feelings of our nature. The sight of the young and lovely woman unable to restrain the agony of her feelings produced an instantaneous effect; the shouts at once rose from the thousands who beheld her, and hundreds of workmen who were employed on a row of houses constructing near the spot from which the assassin fired, lined the half-finished walls, the window-sills, or clung to the poles of the scaffolding, and rent the air with their acclamations. Accompanied by these manifestations of popular feeling, the Empress proceeded to the Palace. In a short time the news was spread abroad, and the members of the Imperial family, the Ambassadors, the Ministers of the Emperor, the high functionaries of state, and the members of the household, besides a considerable number of other persons having no functions under the Government or in the Palace, hastened to present their congratulations.

The Emperor had previously announced his intention and that of the Empress to be present at the Opera Comique on the Boulevards Italiens, nearly opposite the Rue Laffitte. He and the Empress, notwithstanding what had occurred, were punctual to their word. They arrived at the theatre about nine o'clock, but long before that hour an immense crowd had collected on the boulevard, from the Madeline to the Rue Vivienne, to manifest their sympathy at his escape. It is calculated that there could not have been less than 200,000 people of every condition collected. The reception was most enthusiastic as the Imperial carriages, attended by an escort of Guides, drove up the Rue de la Paix and Boulevard until they stopped at the door of the theatre; and on their Majesties appearing in their box the whole house rose and uttered the warmest acclamations. For a considerable time it was found impossible to commence the piece, and during the performance the audience, as if unable to keep down its feelings, rose three or four times to give vent to them. The Emperor and Empress left the house at half-past eleven, and even at that hour the multitude still lined the Boulevards; the shouting was enthusiastic, as before, and followed them until they entered the Palace of the Tuileries.

The assassin, on his arival at the Conciergerie, was at once examined by the Prefect of Police, and then by the Minister of Justice. The examination is kept secret, but it appears that the man's name is, according to his own account, Liverani, He professes himself to be a shoemaker from Rome, where he states having suffered much from the French bombardment of that city; and that since then, he has sworn a personal hatred to the Emperor, and was resolved to kill him. This story is not credited, and it is supposed that he is but the instrument of some higher hand, and the agents of those conspirators whose ideas of liberty are inseparably associated with assassination. He is said to be a Piedmontese, and to have come from London. His hat and the revolver which he used in his murderous attempt are also described as of English manufacture. He remains, of course, in close custody.

It was intended at first that the morning papers should not notice the attempt, and it was ten o'clock last night when the popular manifestation was so enthusiastic and so general in favor of the Emperor and Empress, that the communication which has appeared was sent round to them. There can be no doubt that among people of all classes there is but one opinion—that of indignation against the murderer, of admiration at the cool courage of the Emperor, and of tender and affectionate sympathy for the Empress.

The assassin refused to tell the names of his accomplices, if he has any. He has resided for some days past at the Hotel de Rome, on the exterior Boulevard Pigale, near Montmartre. The propietor of the hotel and the porter have been examined.

Result of the Vienna Conferences.

The explanation of Lord Clarendon in the House of Lords on Thursday night has given official confirmation to that which rumor had already suggested with regard to the details of the Conference of Vienna. It appears that the Allies proposed to Russia two alternatives,—one that the Euxine should be declared a neutral sea, open to the commerce, and closed to the ships of war, of all nations; the other that the Russian force in that sea should be in some degree limited. The Russian Plenipotentiaries rejected both these proporitions, and afterward made some counter-proposition of their own, which England, France, and Austria unanimously agreed was inadmissible. Still, however, Lord Clarendon is unable to tell what course Austria is about to adopt. Count Buol considers that the means for obtaining peace are not wholly exhausted, and that it will be the especial duty of Austria to endeavour to discover some means of attaining that end consistent with the engagements she has entered into with the other powers. This, then, is what we know with certainty of the present state of our foreign relations.

Military Convention with Austria.

The Constitutionel contains the important announcement that the military convention between France and Austria had been signed; and that Austria will probably take the field earlier than was expected, that is about the beginning of June. It is reported that while the Austrian army under Marshal Hess will operate on the Pruth and the Polish frontier, a French army, supported by the Sardinian contingent, will land in Bessarabia under the orders of Marshal Vailliant. The war will then be waged on four different points—in the Crimea, in Bessarabia, in Russian Poland, and in the Baltic. Notwithstanding all the signs which precede this conflict of giants, some of the French and Belgium papers still cling to the floating debris of the wreck of the Vienna Conferences with all the tenacity of drowning men, and prognosticate that, although the profound statesmenship of a Russell, and the ability and firmness of a Drouyn de l'Huys, have failed, the Russian envoys will cry mea culpa, make the amende honorable, and accept the terms proposed by the Western Powers, which hardly more than a week ago they pronounced as inadmissible.

The Allied Force in the Crimea.

The Paris correspondent of the Times writes—'The announcement of the suspension of the fire before Sebastopol has produced an unfavourable effect here, and has given rise to a variety of rumours, more or less unfounded, respecting the losses of the army, the state of our works, and the want of ammunition. With regard to this last point, I am informed on good authority that there is no scarcity. Ammunition to an enormous amount has been sent to the Crimea, and is still sent without intermission; and with the reinforcements it is calculated that the total force, including the Sardinian contingent and the reserves at Constantinople, will be little, if at all, short of 200,000. Such an army, the greater part composed of French and English, ought to be able to do anything and go any where."

SIEGE OF SEBATOPOL.

Fourth Division Camp before Sebastopol.
APRIL 17.

The siege goes on as usual—that is, there are many guns fired every day, tons of powder are discharged, hundreds and thousands of tons of shot and shell are hurled against the Russian earthworks, and the French are making some progress in establishing themselves in front of their lines towards the enemy's batteries, and have gained a bit of vantage ground from them in front of the Flagstaff Battery A ship steals close in to the entrance of the roads at night, fires her broadside at the town and departs. The railway groans beneath the weight of the trucks full of ammunition sent up by it; and the electric wire cable has been landed at St. George's, to convey the news of our grand success to Cape Kaliakri when we are fortunate enough to achieve it.

A certain number of killed and wounded are struck off the strength of our army every day, and the Russians still hold their own, though their losses must be very great, and the cannonade must cause considerable injury to the town. It is said there is to be an assault "to-morrow," i. e., on the day after that on which the speaker is addressing you; but at present it would be a hazardous thing to attempt, for the Russians last night showed us that they had plenty of guns, and of men to man them all along their lines, and as yet they have ample supplies of ammunition and round shot. Their shells seem to be used more parsimoniously than they were when our fire first re-opened. It is little short of marvellous how they have kept up their supplies so long. The stores of Sebastopol cannot be like the widow's cruise, and one would think they had been pretty well cleared out by this time. Where the Russians get their shot and shell from, it is not easy to determine, and still less can be ascertained how they carry such prodigious loads of materiel into the city. The real strength of the corps of Osten-Sacken & Liprandi, which extended outside as far as below Baidar and the Belbek, cannot be exactly discovered, but steps will shortly be taken to beat up their quarters with the aid of the Turkish reinforcements, and an offensive movement may be expected against the enemy's right flank in a few days. The French, developing that high degree of military science for which they are celebrated, use all the means of attack known in modern sieges, with considerable success, and advance their works daily towards the enemy, whom they bombard and cannonade and discharge rockets at incessantly. The sap and the mine are at work, eating their way slowly into the outer defences of the place, but the canon will never take Sebastopol. It is, besides, asbettoslike, its buildings will not burn even if we could set them on fire, and, in fact and truth, our batteries are too far from the public edifices in that part of the city to which they are opposed to reach them, always excepting those portions of them armed with large mortars, which as yet, however, have not produced any effect appreciable to a civilian outside the town.

We have, however, made a much more serious impression on the town and the batteries than we did last year, and our allies, instead of being "snuffed out" by the Russians, have established to a certain extent a superiority of fire, and have maintained a vigorous cannonade and bombardment against the place without remission or feebleness since this day week, inflicting thereby great loss of life and damage to the enemy's stronghold. The Russian army in the field seems to be dwindling away, or to be doomed to inactivity. We hear of men marching away to our right flank and rear, and of others descending from Mackenzie's Farm towards Baidar and Tchorgoun, but they are swallowed up, as it were, when they enter the ravines behind us. The army of the Tchernaya is visibly decreased. The men are probably draughted off to the north side of the town, for the encampment of the enemy at Hollandia has been sensibly augmented, and the force of the rear of the Round Tower has also been strenthened. The lines of the Russian huts on the heights over Inkermann along the Tchernaya remain unchanged, but I do not see so many men in them. They have a respectable force of cavalry picketed outside Inkermann, and numerous batteries of artillery, and their men are employed incessantly in throwing up great earthworks to the north and north-east of the place. These works are all beyond the range of the batteries on our right, and can only be intended to resist any attempt on our part to march round to the north side, or to turn the left flank of the enemy. Our right flank is pretty well defended against any attack at present by the swollen state of the Tchernaya, which has flooded the valley of Inkermann from the marshes at the end of the roads of Sebastopol up to the low ground below the famous Sandbag Battery. The Lighthouse batteries are nearly silent now; but the riflemen on both sides keep up a constant fire on each other from the caves and rocks at each side of the valley where its sides contract at Inkermann. Sometime ago I was watching three French Chasseurs "potting away" at a Russian who was sitting with his legs dangling over the sides of a precipice, and now and then returning their fire. The French knew the man quite well, and admitted he was so good a shot they did not care to expose themselves too freely. All their balls fell short of the man, and after he had received three or four rounds from each, he raised his rifle, down went the Chasseurs and somebody else, "ping" flew the ball through the air, and "pop" it came against the rock behind which the foremost Chasseur was crouching. The Frenchman picked up the piece of lead quite flattened out and broken, and showed it to his comrades, and then they resumed their practice, the result of which I did not wait further to ascertain. Many of the Russian riflemen are excellent shots, but the majority of them are not equal to our own or to the French Chasseurs. An amateur in one of the batteries, anxious to see what kind of shooting the enemy would make, held "wideawake" just above the parapet; in a moment two bullets went through it, and one of them took a fancy to the gentleman's forefinger, and to a bit of another finger, and carried them away with it, so that the unfortunate experimentalist will be able to speak with authority on the question of sharp-shooting. This is, by the way, in order to show the desagremens of work in the trenches, without reference to the chance of round shot and shell. Poor General Bizot, of the French engineers, fell a victim to his contempt of the enemy's riflemen, and it is wonderful how he escaped so long, for he was accustomed to walk about the advanced trenches with a conspicuous little red skull cap, all embroidered with gold lace on his head, right under the enemy's eyes. Our sailors are but little exposed to riflemen, but nothing exasperates Jack so much as the bee like hum of a Liege ball as it flies past his head; and if he were in the advanced work, he would soon be food for the worm. The naval brigade have received 250 men from the Rodney, but, although Captain Lushington was willing to undertake working the guns of the right attack with his men, the siege artillery still retain their batteries. The weather has been exceedingly fine for the last two days—warm, without being excessively hot. The troops are in good spirits.

The following is my diary since the date of my last letter:

SATURDAY, 14th

The conjecture which I found so much difficulty in forming this morning turns out to be correct. The severe and protracted conflict on the left which kept us up on Cathcart's Hill beyond the small hours, originated in a very resolute and angry sortie of the Russians from the Flagstaff batteries on the left of the French. At first, the weight of the torrent of armed men which swept out of the enemy's lines bore back the French in the advanced works, where the covering parties are necessarily thin, and many lost their lives by the bayonet; but our gallant allies contested the ground desperately, and, having received the aid of an inconsiderable reserve, charged the Russians and drove them right into their own lines, to which they fled with such precipitation that the French entered across the parapet along with them and reached their advanced guns, which they could have spiked had the men been provided with the means of doing so. The enemy poured such volleys of musketry, grape, canister, and round shot on our allies, that they were obliged to retire to their own works; and indeed, no steps had been taken to enable them to secure their hold of the place. As they were retiring under a heavy fire the enemy made another sortie in greater strength and with more determination and fury than before. A sanguinary fight took place between the works, in which the bayonet, the musket-stock, and the bullet were used in a pell-mell struggle, but the French asserted their supremacy once more, and in spite of the fierce charges of the Russians, in defiance of the stubborn resistance evoked by the cries and example of the enemy's officers and by repeated cheers, forced them battling back across their trenches once more, and took possession of a little advanced work, which they held all night, in defiance of the enemy's efforts to dislodge them by a vigorous cannonade, to which the Allies replied by incessant shells. In order to distract the attention of the enemy, and prevent too many of them crowding over to the left of the town, General Bosquet sent down word to the men in the trenches on our right to keep up a constant fusillade on the Russian works. The loss of our allies was, I regret to say, considerable in this brilliant affair. The report is, that they had six officers and 300 men hors de combat but I believe there were six officers killed and nine officers wounded. The energy and spirit with which the French fought are beyond all praise. This morning our advanced batteries were armed with 14 guns by a working party under Colonel Smith, 58th regiment. They opened with very great effect at daybreak, and directed so severe a fire against the Russian batteries throughout the day that they were obliged to concentrate the fire of a considerable number of guns upon the two batteries in order to protect themselves from their destructive effect. We nevertheless maintained our fire, although the position of our batteries exposed them to considerable damage. Lieutenant Preston, 88th Regiment, a young and promising officer, was killed in the trenches this morning. There are complaints that our advanced works are slightly constructed, but the engineer officers have great difficulties to contend with, and never can get a sufficient number of men from the officers in command to carry out the works which they desire to make. It must be a strong earthwork which will resist round shot from a battery only 600 yards distant. It would appear that neither the engineers nor the commanding officers are to blame, but that the mischief arises from the small force available for duty. The men go to the trenches in high spirits now, as Mr. Tower and Mr. Egerton, the administrators of the Crimean Army Fund, have obtained permission from the authorities to give each man a pint of beer before he starts. On the morning of the 12th they sent up by rail 1,100 gallons of beer and four nine-gallon casks of port wine, to be distributed gratis among the men engaged in the trenches. I saw a party of 900 men of the 4th Division marching down on Saturday night to the batteries, and I really believe they could not have looked more cheery and pleasant had they been bound to Greenwich Fair. They were comfortably covered with water-proof cloaks and leggings, and there was a tremendous fire of fragrant tobacco kept up as they marched off jauntily and lightly to the smoke, blood, and dirt of the trenches. By a careful and prudent arrangement the men are kept under cover, but the utmost caution cannot now prevent casualities. There is a report that a Russian magazine blew up this morning, but that was the only report I heard, as the actual explosion did not reach my ears. The French have kept up a tremendous fire all day. Our batteries are firing with regularity and admirable precision. The Round Tower and Mamelon fire languidly; the latter, indeed, is all but silent, but the large guns from the re-entering angle of the west face of the former are very well served and their shot are well aimed. There is a battery opposite the French left, among the houses of the town, which annoys our allies considerably. However, they are making arrangements which will very speedily silence it, or, at all events, reply to its fire directly. We have been too often deceived when we said, "Oh, we are making a battery to silence so and so," to repeat the phrase with confidence any longer. It sometimes happens that the guns to be silenced get the superiority. The remarkably fine quality of the metal of the Russian guns—in other words, their excellent iron—gives them great advantages by enabling them to fire rapidly and continuously. Besides, many of their troops are under cover in caves, pits, and galleries at the back of the batteries and of the elevated ground on which they are built. Notwithstanding all this, the resolution, strength, indomitable perseverance, and devotion of the allies give them the superiority in every kind of contest with the enemy. Every day fresh ruins are accumulated around the Flagstaff battery from the fire of the French guns, and there can be no doubt whatever but that the enemy are exposed to very great loss from the fragments of stones and timber struck by our shot.

SUNDAY.

Lieutenant Mitchell, Royal Artillery, was killed while on duty in the trenches. He was quite a lad, and was universally liked by officers and men. His Excellency Omar Pasha, attended by his suite, rode round the rear of our batteries to-day, and Lord Raglan visited the Turkish encampment on the hills to the west of the Col de Balaklava. It appears that our fleet is not quite idle. Every night one English and, possibly, one French man-of-war runs in and discharges a broadside into the south side of the town. The Wrangler was the first, and she is supposed to have done some mischief with her heavy guns. The Valorous went in so close that the enemy caught sight of her, and as she discharged her broadside they sent the very first shot slap through her paddle-box, and obliged her to haul off as well as she could. The batteries continue their fire all day as usual. The effect of this continual pounding is tiresome to a degree beyond all expression. The most enthusiastic amateur is weary of a field-day after four hours' firing of the Royal Horse Artillery and a few volleys of small-arms. What would he be if his tympanum were exposed to the ceaseless beat of the burst of tremendous ordnance and the dull echoes of the bombardment among the hills, mingled with the treble of rifles, which pop, pop, pop for ever, morning, noon, and night, and now have done so for a long week? There is no quiet in tent or hut. Every fresh roar of the guns, every sudden explosion, sends us running to the hill top to see what is the matter, or keeps one in an uneasy anxious state in which writing is all but impossible. The Redan, Garden Batteries, Round Battery, and Barrack Battery, were worked with activity throughout the day. The Round Tower has had enough of it, and is nearly shut up; and the fire on the Mamelon is so heavy and constant that the enemy cannot get up guns to it.

Disturbances in Russia.

The disturbances in the Ukraine are not at present of importance; the real cause of the movement is said to have been the complete exhaustion of the means of the peasantry, by the immense supplies which they have been obliged to provide for the southern army. They have to give food and transport supplies without remuneration. The insurrection has spread most in the immense estates of Count Branitzki, who is related to the Imperial family.

The plan of the founders of the society is to establish an African school at Tunis, and thence gradually to extend their influence southward, endeavoring, by the circulation of Bibles, and by the aid of native agents and missionaries, to extend the knowledge of Christianity.—Life Illustrated.

Extracts from our Exchanges, given in this number, show an increasing Emigration of Irish and other foreigners from the United States to these Provinces, and attribute the same to the Know-Nothing movement. That is satisfactory. Canada will be benefitted by such Emigration, and so will Irishmen. Know-Nothingism had its origin in the tyrannical instincts of that portion of the American people that support it, and their very natures must change before they will cease their encroachments upon the rights of the Irishmen and Germans they have invited to their shores; they may learn by this, that though oppression begins by selecting the colored man, it eventually makes a victim of the white also. We never could see anything to admire in Know-Nothingism; but as good is permitted to come out of it, we welcome the good. These Provinces are large enough for all the Irishmen, Frenchmen, Colored men or Germans that may come—in truth, they are wanted; religious and civil liberty they did not enjoy in Europe, neither have they realized their hope in the United States, but in this country we have both. Let them come along then, but may they bring discretion, toleration, prudence and energy along with them, and determine to be loyalty itself.

The Queen's Birth Day.

The 24th was celebrated with great spirit in this city and vicinity. Excursions by steamboat and railroad were well patronised; the Firemen had a beautiful parade; large numbers of the colored citizens made up a pleasant pic-nic party, through the exertions of Messrs. Judah, Richards, Carter, and others. An enthusiastic meeting of citizens, without distinction, was held in the St. Lawrence Hall, by order of the Mayor, and His Worship gave a dinner to the members of the Council at his mansion, and threw open "Moss Park," his beautiful grounds, for an evening promenade to the citizens.

American Anti-Slavery Society.

The anniversary of this Society, recently held in New York, was the most effective meeting of the kind ever held in that city. Messrs. Garrison, Sumner, Wilson, Brown, and other eminent men participated in the debates. That section of Anti-Slavery is evidently gaining ground in the States, as well as in England and Scotland. Success to it, and all those honestly engaged in it!

The "National Council."

The meeting of the "National Council," previously announced to be held in New York, came off in anniversary week. There seems to have been a little "mite" of a gathering, and the whereases and resolutions adopted were most beautifully contradictory, as will be seen by perusal of some of them given below. The end, is to be a convention in Philadelphia next October,—a National Convention. It was determined to beg funds for a college,—to "pay the printer,"—to meet all the opposition to the doings of the few there assembled, even if made by the united people, though as it has been, from conscientious motives. Though the begging of funds to "set up" a colored college should be a reality, as it no doubt will be, and the school should prove a failure, as it probably will, for reasons given by Mr. Downing and others, still our colored brethren will have the satisfaction of doing two very necessary things, to wit; keeping up a rumpus generally, and spending dollars enough to inaugurate and support the October Convention, to give trades to all the "anxious" youth of both sexes, that could be induced to undergo the fatigue of learning trades at present in the three great cities of Rochester, New York, and Philadelphia. However, with the return of the National Conventions to Philadelphia, it is to be hoped there will be a return to reason. (?)

Mr. Frederick Douglass presented the following resolutions from the Business Committee:

Whereas, Long years of oppression and slavery have debarred colored youth from gaining a practical knowledge of mechanical science, and have doomed them to menial avocations for a livelihood; and whereas, a bitter and persecuting prejudice against colored people (peculiar to our Republican community) stands as with drawn sword ready to strike down the aspiring colored youth the moment he advances toward the work-shop, with a view to attaining a respectable trade; and whereas, the only escape from degradation for our people is to be found in a renunciation of the position of a servile class, and in turning our attention to education, productive industry, and a practical knowledge of mechanical sciences; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the first business of this Council, charged with the duty of looking after and promoting the well-being of the colored people, to establish some means whereby our youth may no longer be deprived of useful, honorable and lucrative trades.

Which were adopted by the following:

AYES.—Frederick Douglass, S. Meyers, Franklin Turner, S. Smith, J. N. Still, Jas. D. Bonner, J. McCune Smith—7.

NAYS.—George T. Downing, P. A. Bell, James E. Brown, Edward V. Clark, W. C. Nell—5. [A large house.]

Mr. Downing presented the following, which were adopted:

Whereas, It has been shown in the discussions before this Council that there are a number of colored youth who seek employment and instruction as mechanics; that there are also in various sections of the country employers and mechanics willing to receive colored youth as apprentices or workmen, and

Whereas, It is most desirable that these two classes should have a medium of communication; therefore,

Resolved, That the members of this Council constitute themselves a Committee on Trades and Employments, whose duty it shall be to receive and investigate the wants of those seeking apprenticeships and employments, and of those willing to employ or instruct colored youth.

[The latter, at one blow, obviating the need of a college.]

Correspondence.

From our Chatham Correspondent.

No. I.

To the Editress of the Provincial Freeman:

DEAR MADAM,—Your Philadelphia correspondent justly complains that residents of different parts of the Province do not communicate as much as they should from their respective localities, for the encouragement of those at a distance who are eagerly asking for information from this and other places, of their advantages, and the public spirit of their neighbors. I have waited for abler ones here to take up the task; but having waited in vain, I now "write a few lines:" so if you think what I herewith send will interest your readers, they are at your service.

The immediate subject of my letter is not one that will greatly recommend the place to strangers; but they must bear in mind, that we are not all given over to a desire for the perishable things about which I shall speak, but that here, as in every place in Canada, where colored men are to be found, are men and women who do not hunger for the "flesh pots of Egypt." Before I proceed to the main question, allow me to say, that a more prosperous place than our own Chatham, for its years, is not to be found out of doors; we have among all classes and complexions, good mechanics, storekeepers, teachers and laborers. This is the nucleus for the trade of Kent County, a thriving place, and though once the seat of abominable prejudice, is fast becoming unexceptionable in every sense. You may take me to be deceived by appearances, in view of the many evidences of colorphobia given by the Member for this County (Mr. Larwill); but allow me to say, that Mr. Larwill does not represent the sentiments of respectable white "folks" in this County—they are ashamed of him!

In a business way, this place is every thing one could wish, though not yet free from censure, on the school question: but in that, too, there is manifestly a change; unlike former times, men here begin to speak out in our favor, and we are making ourselves known. In my next, I will refer more particularly to the men among us who are doing credit to themselves, and the place, and to other points of interest; but at present, must go to the business in hand.

I am now tempted to desist, lest what I have to say, will contradict what has already been said, of our general prosperity and patriotism; but not so. In every community unpleasant things occur, and it would be a miracle were ours to prove an exception; all I regret, is, that they occur so often, are of such a character, and are so productive of mischief.

It is pretty extensively known that this is a grand resting place of fugitives, many of whom come all the way from Slavery unaided, many more who come under guidance of conductors who bring them here from various motives, if we are to tell the tree by its fruit—some for love of God and humanity, and others for love of the almighty dollar. The ones who are moved by the first holy impulse, are generally quiet, unobtrusive persons, who when once safe with their "freight," quietly depart on their journey—the second not content with their profession and the perquisites arising therefrom, generally give us, by way of variety, favors of an objectionable kind. They delight in introducing something to "aid" the fugitives—loud-mouth against beggars, they would appoint the agents for begging and receive all the goods—whispering into the ears of the fugitives meanwhile, as Satan did, when as a "toad," he sat "squat" at the ear of Eve, that the "free people are against them," because they, with the sensible ones among the fugitives, have the honor of the country and people at heart.

So completely have they succeeded in their work, that among our colored population, at this time, the most bitter feeling is raging—conversations in streets, bar-rooms, stores and private houses, tend to a firmly drawn line of separation between the two classes. A man called Fairfield, accompanied by a Quaker doctor named Stanton, from Newport, Indiana, did, after two unsuccesful meetings, succeed in getting a vote of 70 fugitives (mostly new arrivals) against 53 of the most staunch, respected and worthy men of the place, fugitives and free born, in favor of appointing agents—mark! of stopping begging in the States by giving the society they would form, sole power to appoint agents.

The first meeting was held on the 30th of April, and was opposed by the Rev. H. J. Young, of the A. M. E. Church, and others. The second one was held May 1st, when every thing was said for the purpose of driving off persons free born. Such language was used by fugitives to sustain Fairfield, but it failed, and the meeting adjourned to meet in the Town Hall, on the 2nd. A Constitution and By-laws, offered by Mr. J. M. Bell (suitable for associations organized in this Province, and different from the one in support of begging offered by the Fairfield party) was opposed by them, but sustained by Messrs. Wilson, Bell, Francis, and others, and finally adopted with some amendments; but when the question came up for the appointment of agents to receive subscriptions, moneys, clothes, &c., a resolution offered by Mr. Bell, in opposition to the reception of such things from the States, or the appointing of agents to represent Societies in Canada, was voted down, and Wilson, Bell, Francis, and the rest, publicly branded as being opposed to their interests.

Here is the resolution offered by Mr. Bell, and which was voted down by the number given, 70 to 53, by the Fairfield party, not allowing the women to vote on this resolution:—

Whereas, we have been grievously misrepresented, in various parts of the United States, by men feigning to be our friends, who have proven themselves to be wolves in sheep's clothing—therefore,

Be it understood, from this 2nd of May, 1855, That we are utterly opposed to begging, and that we now put our final veto on the system; that as we live in a land sufficiently productive to yield all that we need, by making use of the means placed in our power, we do not thank any people for their old clothing and cold victuals.

I must close this letter now, as I am afraid it is already too long, but in my next number, I shall pursue this subject.

I had forgotten to say that Stanton, the Quaker,—and though there are numerous friends of the colored man among them, one "scabby sheep" and another will sometimes turn up,—is said to be an agent of the Western Anti-Slavery Society, sent out to buy lands for fugitives. I think the citizens of this country, without distinction, ought to look into the question of such organizations. I hear a report that they organized a society of two hundred at London, but have my doubts; it is an easy matter, you know, to get up a talk, when a bad measure is to be introduced. They decided to have their proceedings published in papers in the States. So look out for something shameful. We hear a great deal said about loyalty, but such Societies as that of Fairfield and Stanton, let him be sent by whomsoever he may, clearly tends to disloyalty and as such should be opposed, and its members watched.

Arrival of the "America."

HALIFAX, May 24th.

The Cunard steamer America arrived at this port this morning, with Liverpool dates to the 12th inst.

The weeks budget of news is very meagre, affording no events of importance.

Before Sebastopol affairs were much in the same position, though some trivial successes for the allies had, in the meantime, been recorded.

The tone of public sentiment, appears to have resolved itself into the conviction that the war must be a protracted one, and without hope of assistance from Austria.

Several extensive failures in Liverpool were rumoured just before the vessel sailed. No names were given.

AWFUL CASE OF SHIPWRECK.

Seven Men Living on Camphene and Shark Oil—Inhuman Conduct of an Unknown Schooner.

On the outward passage of the bark Clara Windsor, March 19, lat. 32°, 38 min., a fresh breeze from S.W., saw a wreck to leeward, with two men on the bow and waving their hats. The bark hove to, got out a boat and succeeded in taking them off. The wreck proved to be the schooner John Clarke, Capt. McRay, hence from Jackmel. The men stated that they were all that was left out of seven men that sailed in the above schooner from New York on the 3rd day of March, bound to Jackmel; that on the 6th March, 9 p. m., while under double reefed sail, wind W.S.W., a squall struck the schooner from W. N. W., and threw her on her beam ends, and it was an hour before they succeeded in cutting away the weather rigging, when the mainmast and foremost went close by the deck, then she righted. The hatches had bursted and the vessel was full of water. They were left without food or water, but on the next day obtained a keg of crackers, that were wet with salt water. After which, got a bucket of vinegar, some shark-liver oil and some camphene; the latter made them stupid, and feel as if they were on fire. The fifth day after the catastrophy, the captain, mate, steward, and two men died, and they, the two remaining men, had nothing to eat for eight days previous to being taken off. Those that died went crazy previous to death. They also state that they saw two different vessels, one of which—a fishing schooner—came close to them, so that they could see the man at the helm. They hallooed to them, and she hove to and came close up under their lee, and after surveying them, put their helm hard up, and bore away without offering any assistance. All were living at that time, and but for it being before daylight, could have read her name, as her letters were indistinctly visible. The weather was good and nothing to hinder them from saving all hands. The names of the two saved were Robt. McRay, (Captain's son,) and Chas. Lowell.

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

Interesting Passage from her Autobiography.

The following extracts from a letter addressed by Mrs. Stowe to a friend in this country, in answer to an inquiry for some particulars of her early life, give an account of the origin of the world-renowned "Uncle Tom's Cabin." After a playful description of her personal appearance—an account of her marriage with Professor Stowe, at the age of twenty-five—her settlement at Lane Seminary, near Cincinnati, in Ohio, and the increase of her family, she says:

"The most beautiful of these (her children) and the most beloved lies buried near my Cincinnati residence. It was at his dying bed, and at his grave, that I learnt what a poor slave mother may feel when her child is torn from her. In the depths of my sorrow, which seemed to me immeasurable, it was only my prayer to God that such anguish might not be suffered in vain.

"There were circumstances connected with this child's death of such peculiar bitterness—of what might seem almost cruel suffering—that I felt I could never be consoled for it, unless it should appear that the crushing of my own heart might enable me to work out some great good to others.

"His death took place during the cholera summer, when in a circle of five miles around me nine thousand were buried—a mortality which I have never heard exceeded anywhere.

"My husband, in feeble health, was obliged to be absent the whole time, and I had sole charge of a family of fifteen persons. He could not return to me, because I would not permit it; for in many instances where parents had returned from a distance to their families and the infected atmosphere, the result had been sudden death, and the physician warned me that if he returned, it would only be to die. My poor Charlie died for want of timely medical aid; for, in the universal confusion and despair that prevailed, it was often impossible to obtain assistance till it was too late.

"I allude to this because I believe that much that is in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' had its root in the awful scenes and bitter sorrows of that summer. It has left now, I trust, no trace in my mind, except a deep compassion for the sorrowful, especially for mothers who are separated from their children.

"During the long years of struggling with poverty, sickness, and a hot, debilitating climate, my children grew up around me. The nursery and the kitchen were my principal fields of labour. Some of my friends, pitying my toils, sent some of my sketches to certain liberally-paying annuals, with my name. With the first money that I earned this way I bought a feather-bed! For, as I had married into poverty, and without a dowry, and as my husband had only a large library of books, and a great deal of learning, this bed and pillows were thought, on the whole, the most profitable investment.

"I now thought I had discovered the philosopher's stone; and when a new carpet or mattras was needed, or when, at the close of the year, it began to be evident that my family accounts, like Dora's, 'wouldn't add up,' then I used to say to my faithful friend and factotum, Anna, who shared all my joys and sorrows, 'Now, if you'll keep the babies quiet, and attend to all the things in the house for one day, I'll write a piece, and then we shall be out of the scrape.' And so I became an authoress! Very modest at first I do assure you and remonstrating very seriously with the friend who had thought it best to to put my name to my productions by way of getting up a reputation.
